The Teacher

Who advised her pupils to strengthen their minds by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, appreciated the truth that bodily health is essential to mental vigor. For persons of delicate and feeble constitution, whether young or old, this medicine is remarkably beneficial. Be sure you get Ayer's Sarsaparilla.
"Every spring and fall I take a number of bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and am greatly benefited."—Mrs. James H. Eastman, Stoneham, Mass.
"I have taken Ayer's Sarsaparilla with great benefit to my general health."—Miss Thirza L. Crerar, Palmyra, Md.
"My daughter, twelve years of age, has suffered for the past year from General Debility.
A few weeks since, we began to give her Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Her health has greatly improved."—Mrs. Harriet H. Battles, South Chelmsford, Mass.
"About a year ago I began using Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for debility and neuralgia resulting from malarial exposure in the army. I was in a very bad condition, but six bottles of the Sarsaparilla, with occasional doses of Ayer's Pills, have greatly improved my health. I am now able to work, and feel that I cannot say too much for your excellent remedies."—F. A. Pinkham, South Moluncus, Me.
"My daughter, sixteen years old, is using Ayer's Sarsaparilla with good effect."—Rev. S. J. Graham, United Brethren Church, Buckhannon, W. Va.
"I suffered from Nervous Prostration, with lame back and headache, and have been much benefited by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I am now 80 years of age, and am satisfied that my present health and prolonged life are due to the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Lucy Moffitt, Killingly, Conn.
Mrs. Ann H. Farnsworth, a lady 79 years old, So. Woodstock, Vt., writes: "After several weeks' suffering from nervous prostration, I procured a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had taken half of it my usual health returned."

CHAPTER XI.

Leaving the Otoman to engage the Othmies, the fierce Tezucan assaulted the Tascalans, an encounter in which there was no equality; but the eyes of Tenochtitlan were upon him, and at his back was a hated rival. His antagonist each sent an arrow to meet him; but as he skillfully caught them on his shield, they too, betook themselves to the maquahuil, Right on he kept, until his shield struck theirs; it was gallantly done, and won a furious outburst from the people. Again Montezuma sat up, momentarily animated.

"Ah, my lord Cacama!" he said, if your brother's love were but equal to his courage, I would give him an army."
"All the gods forefend!" replied the jealous prince. "The viper would recover his fangs."
The speed with which he went was all that saved Itzili from the blades of the Tascalans. Striking to blow himself, he strove to make way between, and get behind, so that, facing about to repel his returning onset, that blades would be to the tzin. But they were wary and did not yield. As they pushed against him, one, dropping his more cumbersome weapon, struck him in the breast with a copper knife. The blow was distinctly seen by the spectators.

Hualpa started from his seat. "He has it; they will finish him now. No, he recovers! Our mother, what a blow!"
The Tezucan disengaged himself, and maddened by the blood that began to flow down his quilted armour, assaulted furiously. He was strong, quick of eye, and skillful; the blades of his weapon gleamed in circles around his head, and resounded against the shields. At length a desperate blow beat down the guard of one of the Tascalans; ere it could be recovered, or Itzili availed himself of the advantage, there came a sharp whirring through the air, and an arrow from the tzin pierced the warrior's heart. Up he leaped, dead before he touched the sand. Again Itzili heard the acclamation for his rival. Without a pause, he rushed upon the surviving Tascalan, as if to bear him down by stormy dint.

Meantime the combat of Tlalaha, the Otoman, was not without its difficulties, since it was not singly with the young Othmi.
"Mictlan take the old man!" cried the Lord Cutlahua, bending from his seat. "I thought him done for; but, see! he defends, the other fights."
And so it was. The Otoman struck hard, but was distracted by the tactics of his foe; when he aimed at the younger, both their shields warded the blow; if he assaulted the elder, he was in turn attacked by the younger; and so, without advantage to either, their strife continued until the fall of the Tascalan. Then, inspired by despairing valor, the boy threw down his maquahuil, and endeavored to push aside the Otoman's shield. Once within its guard, the knife would finish the contest. Tlalaha retreated; but the foe clung to him—one wrenching at his shield, the other intercepting his blows, and both carefully avoiding the deadly archery of the tzin, who, seeing the extremity of the danger, started to the rescue. All the people shouted, "The tzin, the tzin!"
Kolt burst into ecstasy, and clapped his hands. "There he goes! Now look for something!"
The rescuer went as a swift wind; but the clamor had been as a warning to the young Othmi. By a great effort he tore away the Otoman's shield. In vain the latter struggled. There was a flash, sharp, vivid, like the sparkle of the sun upon restless waters. Then his head drooped forward, and he staggered blindly. Once only the death-stroke was repeated; and so still was the multitude that the dull sound of the knife driving home was heard. The tzin was too late.

The prospect for the Aztecs was now gloomy. The Cholulan and Otoman were dead; the Tezucan, wounded and bleeding, was engaged in a doubtful struggle with the Tascalan; and the tzin was the last hope of his party. Upon him devolved the fight with the Othmies. In the interest thus excited Itzili's battle was forgotten.

Twice had the younger Othmi been victor, and still he was scathless. Instead of the maquahuil, he was now armed with the javelin, which, while effective as a dart, was excellent to repel assault.

From the crowded seats of the theatre not a sound was heard. At no time had the excitement risen to such a pitch. Breathless and motionless, the spectators awaited the advance of the tzin. He was, as I have said, a general favorite, beloved by priest and citizen, and with the wild soldiery an object of rude idolatry. And if, under the royal canopy there were eyes that looked not lovingly upon him, there were lips that murmured soft words of prayer for his success.

When within a few steps of the writing Othmie, he halted. They gazed at him in silence; then the old chief said tauntingly, and loud enough to be heard above the noise of the conflict at his side:
"A woman may wield a bow, and, from a distance, slay a warrior, but the maquahuil is heavy in the hand of the coward, looking in the face of his foe-man."
The Aztec made no answer; he was familiar with the wild. Looking at the speaker as if against him he intended his first attack with right hand back he swung the heavy weapon above his shoulder till it sung in quickening circles; when its force was fully collected, he suddenly hurried it from him. The old Othmi crouched low behind his shield; but his was not the form in the tzin's eyes; for right in the centre of the young victor's guard the flying danger struck. Nor arm nor shield might bar its way. The boy was lifted sheer above the body of the Otoman, and driven backward as if shot from a catapult.

Guatamzin advanced no further. A thrust of his javelin would have disposed of the old Othmi, now unarmed and helpless. The acclamation of the audience, in which was blent the shrill voices of women, failed to arouse his passion.

The sturdy chief arose from his crouching; he looked for the boy to whom he had so lately spoken of home; he saw him lying outstretched, his face in the sand, and his shield, so often bound with wreaths and garlands, trown-broken beneath him; and his will, that in the fight had been tougher than the gold of his bracelets, gave way; forgetful of all else, he ran and, with a great cry, threw himself upon the body.

The Chalcan was as exultant as if the achievement had been his own. Even the prouder souls that under the red canopy yielded their tardy praise; only the king was silent.

As none now remained of the challengers but the Tascalan occupied with Itzili—none whom he might in honor engage—Guatamzin moved away from the Othmies; and as he went, once he allowed his glance to wander to the royal platform, but with thought of love, not wrong.

The attention of the people was again directed to the combat of the Tezucan. The death of his comrades now daunted the Tascalan; he rather struck the harder for revenge; his shield was racked, the feathers in his crest torn away, while the blades were red with his blood. Still it fared but ill with Itzili fighting for himself. His wound in the breast bled freely, and his equipments were in no better plight than his antagonist's. The struggle was that of the heaving and hacking which, whether giving or taking, soon exhausts the strongest frame. At last, faint with loss of blood, he went down. The Tascalan attempted to strike a final blow, but darkness rushed upon him; he staggered, the blades sunk into the sand, and he rolled beside his enemy.

With that the combat was done. The challengers might not behold their "land of bread" again; nevermore for them was hammock by the stream or echo of tambour amongst the hills.

And all the multitude arose and gave way to their rejoicing; they embraced each other, and shouted and sang; the paha was waved their ensigns, and the soldiers saluted with voice and pealing shells; and up to the sun ascended the name of Quetzal with form and circumstance to soften the mood of the most demanding god; but all the time the audience saw only the fortunate hero, standing so calmly before them, the dead at his feet, and the golden light about him.

And the king was happy as the rest, and talked gaily, caring little for the living or the dead. The combat was over, and Quetzal not come. Mualox was a madman, not a prophet; the Aztecs had won, and the god was disappointed; so the questioner of the morning flattered himself!

If the Othmi cannot fight, he can serve for sacrifice. Let him be removed. And the dead—But hold!" he cried, and his cheeks blanched with mortal pallor. "Who comes yonder? Look to the arena—way to the people! By my father's ashes, the paha shall perish! White hairs and prophet's gifts shall not save him!"

While the king was speaking, Mualox, the keeper of the temple, rushed within the wall of shields. His dress was disordered, and he was bareheaded and unsandalled. Over his shoulders and down his breast flowed his hair and beard, tangled and unkempt, wavy as a billow and white as the foam. Excitement flashed from every feature; and far as his vision ranged—in every quarter, on every platform—in the blood of others he kindled his own unwonted passion.

The Government of Newfoundland.

It has been announced that Sir Terence O'Brien, governor of Heligoland, will succeed the present governor of Newfoundland, who is to be transferred to a more tropical colony. Governor Blake, who preceded Sir George Des Voeux in Newfoundland, accepted a transfer to the Bahamas. It appears says the St. John Sun, that the governorship is not considered desirable except to Newfoundland people, while a native governor is not acceptable to the citizens. Sir Terence O'Brien, the new appointee, has been occupying a position of no great eminence, his late colony being a little rock four hundred acres in extent, inhabited by about two thousand fishermen, who do not speak English. Heligoland has lost its importance as a military position, has no garrison and is chiefly known as a place where some Hamburg folk go for bathing. The governor enjoys an allowance of £300 a year, which is one-tenth of the revenue of the colony. Sir Terence O'Brien will doubtless welcome an appointment to a colony of 200,000 people, where he will have an official residence in a considerable city and receive an allowance of $12,000. Since the people of Newfoundland protested against the appointment of one of their own most prominent men, they will not complain if the Imperial government is not able to get able men for the position.

Eczema, Itchy, Scaly, Skin Troubles.

The simple application of SWAYNE'S OINTMENT, without any internal medicine, will cure any case of Tetter, Salt Rheum, Ringworm, Piles, Itch, Sores, Pimples, Eczema, all Scaly, Itchy Skin Eruptions, no matter how obstinate or long standing. It is potent, effective, and costs but a trifle.
