DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE—Here's how to work it:

ANYDLBAAXR
IS LONG FELLOW

One letter simply stands for another. In this example A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

A Cryptogram Quotation

COLGX PDX QNCYF MKF YCJX MV

Yesterday's Cryptquote: THE HIGHER A MAN STANDS, THE MORE THE WORD "VULGAR" BECOMES UNINTELLIGIBLE TO HIM—RUSKIN.

BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

(By Thornton W. Burgess)

TO GO OR NOT TO GO?

Naught so difficult you'll find
As an undecided mind.
—Reddy Fox

Reddy was finding out anew the truth of this. Now that Farmer Brown's boy was back Reddy was sure that all would be well in the Old Pasture and he and Mrs. Reddy would not have to seek a new home elsewhere. At first Mrs. Reddy had seemed to feel the same way about the matter, but now the old doubts and fears seemed to have returned. In her mind she was as undecided as ever. Whether to go or not to go was still a question.

Contract Bridge

A SUBTLE POINT

It is to be feared that only excellent bridge players will appreciate the subtlety of the key defensive play in the following hand, which occurred in a team-of-four match.

South dealer. Both sides vulnerable.

♠ Q 9 6
 ♥ A 10 5 4 2
 ♦ J 8 5
 ♣ 9 4

♠ 5 2
 ♥ K J 8 3
 ♦ K 4
 ♣ Q 10 7 6 3

♠ A K J 10 8 4
 ♥ 7
 ♦ A Q 7 6 2
 ♣ J

The bidding was the same at both tables:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
6 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

The opening lead was also the same—both Wests laid down the top clubs. Both declarers ruffed, led the spade jack to dummy's queen and returned a low diamond for the finesse. Naturally, the queen held in both cases—but there was nevertheless a difference in the trick.

At Table 1, West played the diamond three on South's queen, and now this declarer had only one chance for his contract: that the diamond king would drop under the ace. So, after drawing the outstanding trumps, South laid down the diamond ace, and the fall of the king ended the matter.

At the other table, when South led a diamond to the queen, West was a little more imaginative—no played the nine. This gave South something to think about! If the nine-spot was an honest play, West might well have started with the 10-9 blank. If that was the case, the king would not fall on the ace, but a different maneuver by South would be just as satisfactory.

South was an experienced player, but there was no way for him to tell whether West's play of the diamond nine was honest or false. Forced to guess, he decided that it was honest. So he led another trump to dummy, then sent the diamond jack through East in the hope that this play would trap the blank ten in the West hand. Actually, of course, when East covered the jack, West's diamond ten became good for the setting trick.

Mrs. Reddy watched them poking about the entrance to her home.

While Farmer Brown's boy had been away all winter hunters with dreadful guns had more than once visited the Old Pasture, and once Reddy had had a narrow escape from being shot. Traps had been set there for them too, and it was ways of trappers and had found only because both were wise in the hidden traps that neither of them had been caught. Mrs. Reddy had found a trap the very morning of the first visit of Farmer Brown's boy to the Old Pasture. They had led him to it and carried it away. He had been very angry about it. They knew by the look on his face.

Both had felt then that all would be well. But all wasn't well. Hardly was Farmer Brown's boy out of sight when two other boys visited the Old Pasture. They were the ones who had set the trap. When they found it was missing they spent some time looking for it, wondering what had become of it. They didn't yet know of the return of Farmer Brown's boy.

Mrs. Reddy watched them poking about the entrance to her home. They took turns peering down it.

"It is still occupied," said one. "That is a fresh footprint in the sand over there."
