The possibility of a big development in Georgetown this summer, (later learned to be the opening up of the proposed coal run between Mabou, Cape Breton, and the King's County port) was strongly hinted at in the Legislature by Premier Jones yesterday afternoon.

The coal, it is reported, will be taken from a re-opened mine at Mabou by Mr. W. N. MacDonald of Pictou. This coal is to be towed across the approximately 50 mile stretch between the two points to Georgetown.

It is rumored here that Mr. MacDonald has been negotiating with the Maritime Electric Company for a coal contract. Should the proposed scheme become a reality, whether or not the Electric Company would take all or the majority of the coal conveyed could not be learned.

The original plan of Mr. MacDonald was to have the coal processed into "bigluts" at Georgetown. This idea may still come into effect but it is believed that it has been shifted into the background.

THE EASTER STORY

TODAY, NO. 8: BEARING THE CROSS

Albrecht Durer (1471-1528) was the son of a goldsmith in Nuremberg. His father intended his son to follow in that trade, but Albrecht began to evidence exceptional talent for painting in his teens. He painted a celebrated Madonna when 15. His greatest works, however, are engravings on wood and copper. This is one of a celebrated series of 16 plates on the Passion, completed in 1513. The inspiration is the moving verses of St. Luke 23:26-31:

And as they led him away, they laid his robe upon one Simon, a Cyrenian, coming out of the country, and on him they laid the cross, that he might bear it after Jesus. And there followed him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented him. But Jesus turning unto them said, Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children. For, behold, the days are coming, in the which they shall say, Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave suck. Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us; and to the hills, Cover us. For if they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry? (Tomorrow: CHRIST ON CALVARY) himself necessary to the Sampson clan. Then when the family were hard put to it for money, they accepted his offer, moved out, and Martell and his family moved in. The years went by (ten of them in fact) and Sampson was once more on his feet financially. Naturally, he coveted his former home, but Martell would not sell the place - that is, he would not sell unless he got considerably more money than he paid for it. They bargained for a long time; at each conference, Martell added more to the price. Patiently Sampson argued that the figure was too high. At last they agreed. Sampson got the place back on condition that if he ever decided to sell again, Martell was to have the first chance to buy it. Sampson now built a farmhouse, the upper part of which he furnished as a club-room, where the fisher-folk could gather while ashore and pass the time playing cards and telling tall tales.

Two years after the club had had its first opening, Mrs. Sampson died, and their only daughter Marie, now a young handsome girl, kept house for her father. This young woman was a general favorite in the district, and both whites and reds sought her hand in marriage. Was it not true that many French and Indians had gone to the altar to become man and wife? Had Marie not played with the Indian children when she was a little girl? The young Indians of the district admired her white skin, her rosy cheeks, and her quick wit, just as much as did their young white neighbors. Marie was the sort of young lady that any youth would have been happy to carry off to his wigwam or log-cabin. One day Martell and Sampson went together down the Bay to examine some fishing tackle. While they were gone, one of Marie's Indian boyfriends came to the house. Opening the door without knocking - an Indian custom - he walked boldly into the kitchen and ordered Marie to follow him to his home in the woods. For the first time in her life, the young woman was terribly frightened. However, it would never do to let the Indian lad know that she feared him, so she pretended to be considering the matter seriously. At length, she left her smiling face to his and said "All right, Isaac, me go with you anywhere."

Trusting her fully, Isaac led the way across the yard followed a short distance behind by the crafty Marie. Just as the Indian boy entered the nearby woods, Marie rushed back to the house, entered it, and secured the door. The frustrated Isaac came back on the run, tried the doors and windows only to find them all securely fastened. Then he picked up a stout stick and started to smash in the window-panes. Meanwhile, Marie got hold of her father's gun, raced upstairs, opened the attic window and fired a shot directly over Isaac's head. Quickly the youth fled from the place, plenty frightened you may be sure. When the story spread, the settlers and Indians alike made it so hot for Isaac that he left the Island, never to return.
