Rowan - MacNeill
Wedding
 Miss Patricia J. MacNeill, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander S. MacNeill of Magnolia Drive, Kings Park, Toronto, became the bride of Fred W. Rowan, son of Mrs. Bertha Rowan of Astoria and Kings Park, and the late Fred Rowan. The Rev. Raymond Case officiated at the ceremony in the Smithtown Presbyterian Church.
 A reception for 60 guests followed in Vito's, San Remo.
 Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a ballerina-length gown, fashioned with an illusion scalloped neckline, a lace bodice, ace puffed sleeves and a skirt of white nylon with lace inserts. Her fingertip-length veil was secured by a halo of orange blossoms. She wore lace mitts and carried an orchid on a Bible.
 Matron of honor was Mrs. John McNaughton of Kings Park, sister of the bridegroom.
 John McNaughton of Kings Park, brother-in-law of the bridegroom, served as best man. Mrs. Gladys Clark of Stony Brook was organist.
 The bride is a recent graduate of Kings Park Central High School. Mr. Rowan was graduated from Bryant High School, Long Island City. He served in the Navy for four years during World War II and is with the Ford Instrument Co.
 After a two-week honeymoon in New Hampshire and Canada the couple will live in Bayside.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN
 When left alone, Inspector Kenway had telephoned the message which was responsible for the action of the man in brown in following Roy Hemersley, he sat for some minutes, turning over in his mind the new information acquired during the recent interview. He had surprised him, though he had given no indication of the fact while Roy was with him. He would have liked to give them immediate and careful consideration, but the announcement that the man referred to in Borden's interrupted letter was asking for him had come at the moment when he was due to report to his superior officer. He got that meeting postponed but it was growing late and he must not keep Superintendent Moran waiting any longer. He gathered up such papers as he needed and went out of the room.
 "You've been a long time with your visitor," was the superintendent's greeting.
 "Yes. He had a good deal to say."
 "Talkative was he?"
 "Very. Doesn't seem to have learned the wisdom of keeping a still tongue in his head and only giving the information he's asked for."
 "A useful sort of witness at this stage. Did you get anything fresh from him?"
 "Quite a lot. We knew already from the letter Borden had begun that this Hemersley was at the Boldvina last night and from the waiters and manager that a young man followed Borden into the lobby when he broke off his row and rushed out. The commissioner saw him too and reported that, not finding Borden there, he went back. Twenty minutes or half an hour later the same man left the restaurant, wearing an overcoat and hat, to come in again in another 20 minutes or half an hour."
 "Was that Hemersley?"
 "Yes."
 "Did he tell you so?"
 "He admitted it when he knew the man at the door had seen him."
 "Where did he go?"
 "To Darnley Mansions."
 "Did he admit that?"
 "Yes." The superintendent's eyebrows went up in surprise. "You will remember P. C. Andrews reported seeing a young man in evening dress come out of the flats as he went along there when a motor cycle was making a noise. Hemersley saw the constable and guessed he had been spotted. He seemed to think it wiser to own up at once than to lie."
 "What's his explanation?"
 "He refused to give one."
 "Refused?"
 "Definitely. Told me to arrest him and be damned, or words to that effect."
 "What did you do?"
 "Sent him away with a string on his leg. I want to know what he does and whom he communicates with—especially if it happens to be a woman."
 "You don't think he killed Borden?"
 "He had plenty of motive; Borden ruined his father and, Hemersley continues, was responsible for his death, though that seems to have been accidental. He admits there might have been trouble if he and Borden had actually met but says they didn't."
 "Not at the flat?"
 "He says he didn't go inside the building. Andrews only saw him in the entrance. But there was a woman in the flat."
 "You found her footprint?"
 "A bit of it; not enough to use in evidence against her if we ever get her." The inspector spoke regretfully. He took up his note-book and flicked over the pages until he came to what he wanted. "According to the staff at the Boldvina several people left the place round about that time."
 "What time are you dealing with?"
 "Roughly between half-past ten and half-past eleven."
 "The body wasn't found till after two?"
 "No; and Dr. Chivers can't be definite about the time of death. The room was warm and rigor had not started when he got there. But I can't help thinking Borden must have been killed while that motor cycle was backing up outside. Everyone who was in the flats at the time seems to have heard that, but not one admits hearing anything like a pistol shot at any other time. And there were two shots, though they were probably so close together that they sounded like one; but that would only make more noise and increase the chance of their being heard. Why should so many people hear the motor and nobody the shots unless one covered the other?"
 "That sounds reasonable. It might pay to find that cyclist and make sure he didn't kick up his row on purpose to hide the noise of the shots fired by an accomplice."

ALBERT GONSALVES: His poultry plan didn't lay an egg

Diogenes Should Have Looked Down On The Farm
 (By NEA Service)
FAIRHAVEN, Mass. — (NEA) — The neatly-printed "self-service" sign at the Roselawn Poultry Farm's roadstand means exactly what it says — even when it comes to using the cash box.
 Putting his customers strictly on the "honor system," proprietor Albert M. Gonsalves lets them drive up, enter, select their purchases, leave their money in the cash box and depart. If necessary, they even make their own change — all without anyone around to watch them.
 So far, despite the temptations offered, no appreciable shortages have ever been discovered, either in products or money. Sometimes, there'll be a penny or two short at the end of the day, but just as many other times there'll be a penny or two over.
 This Gonsalves attributes to the inability of some customers to count out their change properly.
 All goods are prepared for sale beforehand. Poultry is dressed and kept in a freezer. Eggs are price marked in individual containers, and garden vegetables are put in sacks. All the customer has to do is make his selection and pay for it. If he wants to weigh something, he can do that, too.
 The stand is now a large operation, with receipts equivalent to those of a good-sized grocery. Local competitors flock to look it over.
 All items come from the large Gonsalves farm, which contains 4000 laying hens, 5000 growing birds and a large assortment of crops.
 Farmer Gonsalves isn't surprised at the success of his "honor system."
 "Most people have basic honorable qualities," he says. "When left to themselves, their sense of honor and pride prevents them from overstepping the line, even when temptation is at its greatest, as it is here."
 To lessen the "temptation" he talks about, Gonsalves goes down to the stand once or twice a day to relieve the cash box of bills of larger denominations.
 Otherwise, it's completely "hands off" from a vigilance angle—which would certainly have started Diogenes.
 They spent two weeks as guests of the bride's mother, Mrs. Bridget Curtis of Cardigan, and the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel King of Georgetown.
 A reception was held at the home of the bride's mother, where a supper was served to a large number of guests.
 Constable and Mrs. King have taken up residence in Capreol, Ontario, where the groom is employed with the Canadian National Railway. The best wishes of their friends follow them for continued happiness.

King - Curtis
Wedding
 "A pretty wedding was solemnized at 3:00 p.m. June 24th, in Toronto, Ontario, when Miss Margaret Curtis, daughter of Mrs. Curtis of Cardigan, became the bride of Constable Lloyd King, son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel King of Georgetown.
 The bride was lovely in her floor-length gown of white satin with net yoke, fitted bodice and full skirt. Her three-quarter-length veil of double illusion fell from her bonnet-like headdress. She wore a corsage of red roses and a single strand of pearls.
 She was attended by Mrs. Newton O'Connor of Toronto, Ont. in a floor-length gown of blue organza with blue accessories and wearing a corsage of pink carnations. Mr. Newton O'Connor of Toronto was best man.
 Following the ceremony a delicious supper was served at the Hotel, Toronto. Later, the young couple left on a honeymoon trip by motor through the United States to P. E. I., where

Attend National C. G. I. T. Camp
 Miss June Bowman of North Wilshire returned on Wednesday, July 23, from attending the First National C.G.I.T. Camp at Camp Kwasind, Ontario. She was accompanied by Miss Jean Brown of Sydney Mines, N.S., who has been her guest prior to their departure for Maritime Camp Council which is held at Augustin Cove, P. E. I., July 26th to August 8th.
 These two girls, together with seven others from the Maritimes, spent a very enjoyable and instructive ten days at Kwasind, a very beautiful Baptist camp site on Skeleton Lake.
 Girls and leaders from all over Canada attended and exchanged their ideas for furthering and strengthening the Canadian Girls In Training movement. There were several visitors at camp from the National C.G.I.T. committee and four "international" guests from Angola, Bolivia, Formosa and Korea.
 At the end of camp the girls visited Niagara Falls and were entertained at dinner at McMaster University, Hamilton, on their return.
 The camp was under the direction of Miss Margaret Webster, National Girls Work Secretary.
LONG RIVER W. I.
 The July meeting of the Long River Women's Institute was held at the home of Miss Mae Found. The president opened the meeting with the "Ode" and "Creed" and roll call was responded to by seventeen members.
 The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. There were two sick calls reported.
 It was decided that everybody would go and clean the school the first wet day.
 The new committees are: Sick, Mrs. Eustace Paynter, Mrs. W. J. Proffitt, and Mrs. Mae Brown; Lunch, Mrs. Andrew Johnstone.
