Let's Talk It Over

Considering the trouble Summerside firemen are having getting to the scenes of fires because of private citizens usurping the right of way, perhaps it wouldn't be a good idea to have life whistle signals that would inform everyone in what zone a fire was.

A building which is losing a battle with flames is indeed an awe-inspiring sight, and human nature being what it is, it is natural for humans to want to be in the gallery when such pyrotechnics are being displayed.

If people persist in making nuisances of themselves, however, existing regulations, providing they are strong enough, should be strictly enforced, and if no laws exist to restrain those thrill-seekers, provision for such regulations should be made without delay.

We do not think it would be an exaggeration to say that there were ten supporters of the Brooklyn Dodgers in the recent World Series baseball games for every one who hoped the Yankees would come through. Why this great disparity in support for two cities, both of which were remote from our local centres of population? The answer seems to lie in the fact that people in general, are inclined to favor the underdog in any kind of a contest.
