NOTE PAPER OF TO-DAY

Women, we are told—and indeed we know from our own experience—use a much larger style of handwriting than they practised in the past. The consequence is that larger sheets of notepaper are in demand.

Exceedingly bright is the notepaper of the moment. One learns with surprise of a deep scarlet with a black monogram cut in large square letters, and of a peach with a red stripe. A few years ago there was an attempt made to popularise pale green and it succeeded for a time, only to be abandoned—perhaps because many people still consider green as an unlucky colour.

Canary-yellow notepaper with a black address appeals to some letter-writers, while a soft stone grey has a narrow turquoise border and a mother-of-pearl initial.

Helen Moody Silent As To Tennis Plans

By Paul Mickelson.
Associated Press Sports Writer
(By Guardian's Special Wire)
NEW YORK, April 7.—Will Willis? The United States Lawn Tennis Association is in a slight dither over the silence of Mrs. Helen Willis Moody. So far the English tennis official, so far they haven't had even a hint from her as to her 1936 tennis plans. The truth is that Mrs. Moody doesn't intend to make any announcements until she is sure her game is strong enough. The best guess is that Helen will compete in both the Wimbledon and United States championships. Observers say her game is better than ever, something hard to believe.

HOW TO DO DRAWN-THREAD WORK

Drawn-in drawn-thread work is a simple and effective way of trimming household linen, such as table-runners, duchess sets, and face towels. It inserts lines of color into the materials in such a way that they appear to have been woven in when the material was made. Stranded cotton should be used for the work. Different designs can be made by using colored threads and by varying the lengths and width apart of the strands drawn in. Threads which do not reach from edge to edge of the material should be finished off with a small triangle or square worked in satin stitch. First of all draw out a thread where the line of color is wanted and then draw out an inch of the thread next to it. Have ready a strand of colored cotton, a little more than twice the length of the thread which was drawn out. Double it and tie the loop thus formed to the partly pulled-out thread. Then draw out that same thread but from the other end of the material, which will pull through the colored thread into its place. If the thread breaks when drawing it out pull it right out, and start again in the same way by tying the colored cotton to the next thread in the material. When all the colored threads have been drawn in trim the ends by cutting off any surplus strands.

CROUTONS

A great many soups are improved both in appearance and pleasantness by the addition of fried croutons of bread, but they are often spoiled by these croutons being indifferently cooked. Cut up anyhow, fried in deep fat, oily and hard they can be a travesty of what they should be.

In the first place, they should be uniform in size, the best size being cubes of about a quarter of an inch. They should be fried in just enough clarified butter to come halfway up their sides, though where it is especially prescribed oil or lard can be used. A frying-pan is the best utensil.

Pour the clarified butter into the pan and put it on a moderate heat. When the butter begins to get hot put in the croutons and when they begin to brown toast them about so that they color on all sides. Fry them slowly all the time for on no account must the butter get hot enough to brown. Watch them carefully, and when they are done drain them on kitchen paper and keep them hot until you want them. They should be golden and crisp outside, but still soft within.

Croutons can also be made with potato, an excellent variation. Cut your peeled potatoes into cubes of quarter-inch size, plunge them dry to cold water, drain them and fry them in a clean cloth. Cook them in the same way as the bread croutons: they will take about a quarter of an hour. After putting them in the butter, salt them slightly.

Remember that all the croutons, bread or potato, should lie on the bottom of the pan, and should not be heaped up, or they will not fry evenly.

SMALL STEAKS AND CUTLETS

Perhaps the best of all are simple, fried meat dishes, cutlets or small steaks. But do not let us be dull about them, but see how we can turn them into something extremely savory without much trouble.

Let us take as an example some lamb cutlets. Do not egg-and-bread crumb them; just season them with salt and pepper and fry them on each side as they are until they are done. Then take them out of

IN MEMORIAM

MRS. ELLEN TAUNTON

An estimable lady, in the person of Mrs. Ellen Taunton, wife of W. D. Taunton, feature writer on the Halifax Herald and other papers, passed away in Halifax on March 25. Mrs. Taunton suffered a stroke and it was believed was on the road to partial recovery when a second stroke carried her off in her sleep. She was a native of Port Daniel, Quebec, but resided all her life in Nova Scotia, coming to New Glasgow as a small child with her parents. She was a daughter of Michael Cassidy, of New Glasgow, and Ellen Sullivan, his wife, of Port Daniel, and had been married to Mr. Taunton for 54 years. Beside her husband she leaves seven children, four girls and three boys, all grown up, six of whom were with her at the time of her passing. Mrs. Taunton had many friends on the Island, who will regret to hear of her passing. The family have resided in Halifax for the past 43 years.

MINARD'S LINIMENT

Once condemned to die for the murder of an Alabama grocer, Talmage E. Baker, escaped from prison in 1925 while serving the life sentence imposed by a new trial. Since 1926 he worked in Kansas City where he married and became a model citizen. But his past caught up with him when he was recognized from an old police elevator. Arrested by Kansas City police, Baker is held for extradition to Alabama. Friends he made during his new life in Kansas City are rallying to his aid. He is shown after arrest with his wife, who knows nothing of his past and is standing loyally by his now.

FLOUR FACTS

Flour tends to pack on standing, so always sift it once before measuring. Then lift sifted flour lightly with spoon or scoop into standard measuring cup; level off with spatula or straight edge of knife. For a fraction of a cup, fill cup lightly until slightly above desired fraction mark; cut surface of flour gently toward line with edge of teaspoon. For one-fourth cup flour it is easier to measure its equivalent—four level tablespoonfuls.
