Thoughts For Our Time

THE CREATION

Why should we love God? Because He has first loved us. Today I would like to dwell for a while upon the first evidence of God's love—Creation—and upon our reaction to that love.

Apart from God, the world loses all its beauty and all its meaning, and man fails to fit into his place, fails to fulfill his function.

To understand this we must begin at the beginning: In the beginning, the Word was with God.

The world did not yet exist but God existed and God had unstained joy and full Glory in the complete unity of the intimate society of the Three Persons. For God looked into that boundless sea of light that was Himself and He knew Himself and His knowledge was Himself, a Second Person, the Son of the Father; and Father and Son looked at each other and loved, and their mutual love was the Third Person, the Holy Spirit.

But in His knowledge, God knew that His own unlimited Reality was capable of being imitated in many limited realities other than Himself, and in His love God longed to give this joy to them, the joy of giving glory to Him by existing as little imitations of His Immensity.

* * *

And so God spoke, and the world was made—one word, and the world sprang into being like some great giant stretching his limbs. One word, and created light streamed from its uncreated source; and it shone upon the waters, which danced for gladness at being able to manifest their Maker's Depth and Power; and upon the earth which too in its own more quiet way rejoiced and imitated God's Eternal Fruitfulness by covering itself with the green and multi-colored coat of vegetation.

And the stars, the sun and the moon circled in the firmament, marking time as a model of eternity; and the fish in the sea, birds in the air, animals on the earth, each swam or flew or ran to show off the life of their life-giving Creator. God spoke, and it was done; and He looked at the world He had made and saw that it was good. And the world looked at its Maker and saw nothing, for it was blind, and said nothing, for it was dumb.

* * *

Thus God knew that, although His Creation was good, it was not yet complete. There was needed another creature to rule and lead and speak for and see for all the other things, one who could hear the heavens as they told the glory of God, and see through the colors of things to their reality and through their reality to God, who is Reality itself.

There was needed one who could lead the mighty chorus of the dumb creatures in the glad refrain of God's glory and cry to them, "Bless the Lord all you His works, you sun and moon and stars of heaven, you wind and rain, you cold and heat, you day and night, mountains and hills and every growing thing, you flowing fountains, seas and rivers, fish and bird and beast; praise Him and extol His name forever."

There was needed one who could add to this his own voice and give praise and glory surpassing all the others, since he could be given a life beyond all nature and see God face to face, to praise Him forever. What was needed in creation was, in short, one who could adore. And so God said, "Let Us make man."

* * *

This, then, is what man must do if he is to fit into the place for which he was made: He must make return by the love of his act of adoration, for the love of God's act of creation. Adoration is not any mere blind, cringing attitude in the face of an unknown Power. No, we adore what we know. Rather is it the reverent, humble and joyful bowing which is the normal reaction of the creature in the face of the Unlimited and Almighty Love of the Creator.

A holy woman of the fourteenth century, called Juliana of Norwich, once saw a vision of "a little thing, the quantity of a hazelnut, in the palm of my hand; and it was round as a ball. I looked at it and thought, 'What may this be?' And it was answered generally thus, 'It is all that is made.' I marveled how it might last, for methought it might suddenly have fallen to naught for littleness. And I was answered in my understanding, 'It lasteth and ever shall, for that God loveth it.' And so All-thing hath the Being by the love of God."

Indeed, taken by itself, the whole world is just a Little Thing. But Juliana, looking at it, saw three properties "The first is that God made it, the second is that God loveth it, the third, that God keepeth it." Even a Little Thing with such properties is not to be scorned, but rather to be loved. And still more to be loved and adored is He Who first loved it and gave it and us being, in His love.

Strange But True

By F. H. MacArthur

The street lights in the village of Wyoming, N.Y., have never gone out night or day for 40 years.

Under an old agreement, the village gets free fuel for its gas lights. Again, the village fathers say it would be too costly to hire someone to turn them on and off each day.

Despite the rumblings of war, high taxes, and a few other unpleasant things, we are living in a wonderful age. Science has given us a longer and a better life, making life more comfortable, and lifting burdens from the shoulders of mankind.

New inventors are coming into being every day: guided missiles that can't miss their target, space suits that make it possible for humans to live in the outer world, rockets and planes zooming through space faster than the speed of sound—are just a few of the amazing inventions that take their places in the history of this century.

In the medical field we have serums, wonder drugs and what not that have cut the death rate from T.B. in half in the last eight years. Atomic medicines and new x-rays have given mankind its first victories over cancer, and worn-out or diseased organs of the body are being satisfactorily replaced by spare parts.

* * *

Science has turned the home into a woman's paradise with atomic washers, and dryers, food freezing units and air conditioning devices. Light plastic materials take the place of heavy metals and wooda thus making it easier for the housewife to keep the home clean and comfortable.

By another decade we shall no doubt see coal and oil-burning furnaces replaced by atomic power energy. By then, too, half the world will have T.V. sets. Already 47% of the families in the United States have their own sets and 65% live within the range of one of more T.V. stations.

Used rightly, T.V. should help to develop culture of mankind.

Science has also made giant strides in the fields of business and industry, Machines that can do just about everything but think are to be found in many up-to-date business offices in the world's largest cities.

* * *

Glancing ahead to the future we are promised wonders beyond our wildest imagination. Some of us may laugh at the predictions of experts and call them crazy just as men did in the days when the possibility of finding a new world was hinted at. But should we scoff at the rocket experts who say that within 20 years men may be travelling to mars and back in luxury space ships.

The scientists who makes this prediction is the man behind the dreaded V-2 rockets used by the
