Bleak

Prevention against the ravages of this disease can easily be accomplished by having the animals inoculated by your District Veterinarian.

Generally in the North Kings County area it is fast spreading and unless some action is taken it may soon be spread over the entire province.

The disease producing germs are soil born and are capable of remaining in the soil for many years. Therefore, it is necessary that all young stock be inoculated because this disease chiefly affects animals two years and under.

Veterinarians Meet

Approximately 4,000 Veterinarians from Canada, United States and several other countries met in Toronto to hold the 90th Convention of the American Veterinary Medical Association.

Many interesting papers were delivered by outstanding members of the profession. All surgery and other demonstrations were televised on closed circuits.

Club News

The Sea Crest Golf Club met in Malpeque Hall on Friday evening July 10. In the absence of the president, George Riley, the meeting was presided over by vice-president, Neil Matthews.

Twelve members answered roll call by naming a disease of livestock and it's prescribed cure. Next meeting to be a Holstein judging class to be held at the farm of John MacNutt, Malpeque on Friday evening July 24.

Following completion of the new business the test sheets on last month's quiz were returned to members and Mr. Lockerty spent considerable time on project instruction from Club Members' Handbook.

It was decided to show films and sell chocolate dips at Malpeque Hall on Friday evening immediately following the judging class.

The regular meeting of the Head of Hillsboro Golf Club, the "Busy Bees" was held on July 10 at the school following a ball practice.

The president called the meeting to order and the pledge was repeated. The roll call, a suggestion of a way to bring a calf into show shape, was answered by six members.

The minutes were read and approved. Because one of Ralph Coffin's cows has infection, Arthur and Wayne Cameron kindly offered to hold the next judging class on July 24, at their home. It was decided that all other business would be held over until the judging class.

Following is the address from the South Granville W. I. Mrs. Walter Murphy: Dear Ethel:-

As old Father Time seems to have brought us to the "parting of the ways" we your sister members of the Women's Institute cannot let you go without expressing in a small way our esteem for you. We know with your young family it has not always been easy for you to attend all our meetings.

But we always felt your co-operation in all our projects. We shall miss you in our Institute and we feel that some way as you wander down the aisles you shall miss us too. Friendship is not a one-way street; to some of our members you have been a life-long friend as you attended the school in our community. We all join in wishing you the best luck in your new home in another part of Canada.

Please accept this gift as a remembrance from the members of South Granville Women's Institute.

ENGAGEMENT - Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Carew, Hunter River, wish to announce the engagement of their daughter Shirley Olive to Clifford Charles Malcolm son of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Bright Matheson, Hunter River. Marriage to take place at United Church, Hunter River, August 18th.

MISCELLANEOUS SHOWER - On the evening of June 23, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Howard a shower was given to honor Miss Eliza Campbell of Park Corner, previous to her marriage. The bride was escorted by her cousin Miss Nellie Montgomery to the strains of music played by Miss Enid Howatt. Sharon Howatt and Gordie Sims carried in the well-filled basket of gifts.

Mrs. James Montgomery and Miss Lottie Parsons opened the gifts and the verses were read by Mrs. Warren Sims and Miss Ellen Buchanan, while Mrs. Bruce MacLeod arranged the gifts on the table. All sang "For She's A Jolly Good Fellow", after which dainty refreshments were served by the ladies.

MISCELLANEOUS SHOWER - Mr. and Mrs. Frank Brown entertained at their home on June 17 with a shower for Miss Jean Parsons, in honor of her approaching marriage. The bride-to-be was escorted by Miss Nellie Montgomery to a room trimmed with pink and white streamers and seated beneath an arch of apple blossoms. The many gifts were carried in by Miss Linda Pidgeon and Mrs. Ronald Brown, and were opened by Miss Margaret Campbell and Mrs. Wilbert Locke, while the verses were read by Miss Eliza Campbell and Ruth MacRae, and were arranged on the table by Mrs. Hollis MacKay. The bride-elect expressed her appreciation, after which all joined in singing "For She's A Jolly Good Fellow". Refreshments were served by the hostess assisted by several ladies.

Address and Presentation - On July 15 neighbours, friends and relatives of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Murphy and family gathered at their home to bid them farewell prior to their departure to make their home in Toronto. Mr. Clifford Murphy called the gathering to order and an address was read by Mr. John H. McLeod and the presentation of a purse was made by Mr. W. K. Morrison. South Granville W. I. presented Mrs. Murphy with a chenille bedspread. The address was read by Miss Ena Morrison and the presentation was made by Miss Alexandra Kier.

Mr. Murphy on behalf of the family thanked everyone for their kindness. This was followed by the singing of "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows".

Dainty lunch was served by the ladies, and a dance was enjoyed by all. Following is the address. South Granville July 15th, 1953. Mr. and Mrs. Walter Murphy and family:

We, your friends and neighbours of South Granville and vicinity are gathered in your home tonight to bid you farewell before you leave to take up residence in a distant city.

Since you settled in our district you have proved yourselves to be worthy citizens in all phases of community life. You, Walter, have served willingly on the school board and have taken a lively interest in all our school activities, and you, Ethel, shall be missed in the Women's Institute for your Irish wit and humour as you were the only "bit of Ireland" we had.

Laureen and Reggie, your schoolmates shall miss you when school opens in the fall, but they will be glad to know that you are forging ahead in a big school in Toronto.

You will take with you the best wishes of your friends here and we hope you will have success in all your undertakings. Please accept this small gift as a token of esteem for you.

Signed on behalf of your friends assembled here tonight.

We And Our Neighbours

by Ruhamah Scheinfeld Frank

No consideration of the interests of children can overlook their enthusiasm for comics, the radio, and the movies. (Sooner or later, television will add its particular problems). Are these interests good? Are they bad? Does the good overbalance the bad? Whatever the score, they are here to stay and must be reckoned with.

Let us first examine the comics that certainly seem to be more bad than good. They really are not comics in the sense of being laughter-provoking material like the early comic strips in the newspapers. In subject matter, most of them do not differ from other children's books. They contain adventure, fantasy, music, crime, Westerns, humor and nonsense, animal stories and stories about real people, and historical and current events. Unfortunately, too often, there are lurid crime and sex stories that attract older children. In quality, the comics rank all the way from such fine ones as "Terry and the Pirates" and "L'il Abner", to utter trash.

What is the hold of the comics on the average child? Perhaps the greatest, is that children love action, and the comics never have a dull moment. They also love repetition and the same theme and characters are repeated over and over. As in the beloved fairy tales also, the hero overcomes one difficulty after another: defeats the villain over and over, and in the end the good guy wins and the bad guy is properly punished.

Another factor of importance in the popularity of the comics, is that it is so easy to get the story. Most of it is told through pictures, and the reading material requires no effort. To the many children who find reading hard, there is great satisfaction and sense of achievement in getting a story without stumbling through it.

Psychologists say too, that children get certain release (as do adults) from identifying themselves with the triumphant hero. Young people get pushed around (as do adults) more than we realize and in the comics (as in the detective stories) they actually become the hero, able to fight back, able to show the ferocity of hate, anger, fear and aggression, that must be hidden under "nice manners".

This interest in crime and violence did not come in with the comics (or detective story) or the radio or movies, either. Shakespeare, Homer, other great classics are filled with it. And cherished fairy tales are not far behind!

Do comics or similar stories of crime and violence over the radio or in the movies, really provide a safe release for unsocial feelings, or can they lead to violent acts? There is no final answer, but men in a position to know whatever can be known, do not believe the latter.

"I am unaware of any scientifically established relation between reading comic books and delinquency," writes Edwin J. Lukas, Director of the Society for the Prevention of Crime.

Dr. Mandel Sherman, Professor of Educational Psychology at the University of Chicago, states: "In studying the causes of behavior problems of children for many years, I have never seen one instance of a child whose behavior disturbances were traced to the reading of comic books, nor even a case of a delinquent whose behavior was exaggerated by such readings. A child may ascribe his behavior to a comic he has read, or a movie he has seen. But such explanations cannot be considered scientific evidence of causation."

Is it wise then, to let the child read comics as he pleases? No, it is not so simple. Comics, together with the even more potent radio and moving picture that carry similar appeals, make the guidance of parents of the utmost importance.

Censorship is dangerous; mass demand for improved offerings, is slow. In the meantime, there are good comics and bad good and bad radio programs and good and bad movies. There are children who can take no harm from the most lurid, and some who have nightmares after the mildest. There are children who take all three in their stride, and some who have no other interests but these. There seems no help for it. The poor parents must again bear the brunt of the responsibility. They can guide the child gently from the comics to fine books that also offer action and adventure. They can encourage their children to select desirable radio programs, and discourage attendance at poor movies. They can help their children cultivate other interests as well. It's a large order, but if there is a good relationship between parents and children, vacation-time offers a grand opportunity for just this.

Strange But True

By F. H. MacArthur

In 1766, John Butler, M.P., left his home at Warminghurst for London to take his seat in the House of Commons. Early the following morning his sister-in-law, Miss Frances Browne, saw Mr. Butler walking through her bedroom into an adjoining room. The young lady spoke to him but he made no reply.

Then she went down stairs, and was surprised to find the servants about at such an early hour. That same afternoon word was received from London, Mr. Butler had suffered a fatal heart attack at the same time he appeared to Miss Browne.

They couldn't find the dead man until somebody remembered that he kept his private papers in the room next to the one occupied by his sister-in-law.

You have just read the strange story of the phantom and the will. One reason taxes are so high is that too many persons demand, and get, so many things from the government besides government. A colony of wasps actually built a nest on a telephone wire between Benschaw and Tryon. Suddenly the nest disappeared and nobody seem to know what happened to it.

Mrs. Lillian Younker of Irma, Alberta, caught seven mice all one time in a round trap with seven holes.

A strange freak of nature turned up on the farm of Tom Mooney of Hearne, Texas; when a calf was born having two mouths, and four tongues, three eyes and two noses.

Two of the eyes were in their proper position, but the third one was right in the center of the calf's forehead. The animal can breathe through each of its two noses, when the four tongues move independently.

Rev. Isaac Smith, A.M., D.D., was a well known preacher of the 19th century in Massachusetts, and a man who loved to walk about and observe nature.

One day after he'd climbed Blue

Hill he sat down to rest. Suddenly he heard a strange rumbling sound and shrill blast of a whistle. Then there rushed past him a great iron monster snoring and puffing like a winded giant.

Rev. Isaac Smith hadn't the least idea what the strange thing he'd seen was. In fact, he found it hard to describe. A few years later the minister viewed his first train. It was an exact replica of the thing he'd observed on Blue Hill, although at that time trains did not exist.

Ever hear of the "Association of the Doomed"? Well there was such an organization and it was formed by six t.b. patients of Twickenham, Eng., who were told they had not long to live. That was a quarter of a century ago. Following their case histories since then I found that one was shot by a bandit in South America, number two met death in an avalanche in Tibet, the third man was killed by a tiger in India, and the fourth was clawed to death by some wild beast in Portuguese East Africa. The fifth died as the result of an auto accident in 1944, and the last is now in South Africa.

If the old River Misbourne in England knows what its up to there will be no third world war now. At least that is what residents of Chalfont, St. Giles say. The little river stopped flowing during the first great war, but ran again when the war was over. The same phenomenon occurred during world war II. Now the river is flowing again.

In 1906, Ernest Erspamer was at work on a railroad about eight miles from Vancouver, B.C., when he was ordered to proceed to Vancouver to work at another job. To get back to the city he had to hire a boat to take him across the Columbia River. He bargained with an old sailor who had a boat to hire and the next day eight other men decided to accompany the pair for a week-end in Vancouver.

But on the way to the boat, Ernest changed his mind and started picking wild berries that grew along the way. Why? He had a hunch not to take the boat. Finally he got tired and sat down to rest. Then he heard a horn blowing and ran to the water's edge to discover not the boat he'd planned to take but another one. The men saw him, drew near to the bank and took Ernest aboard. The next day while at work, a man approached him. Erspamer recognized him as one of the eight men who'd planned to spend the week-end in the city. "Lucky you did not go on board that boat the stranger told Erspamer. There was only one survivor when she went to the bottom at a dangerous place in the river. I am the survivor. I managed to hang onto the capsized boat until a passing train stopped and some of her crew threw a rope to me."

After spending a week gathering material for a series of feature stories on pickpockets, a newspaper correspondent in Winnipeg had his notebook picked from his pocket as he walked to his office.

Doctors of yesterday prescribed treatments for their patients as fantastic as they were amusing. For instance, a cure for rickets was to fasten a strand of the patient's hair to the bark of a tree. A quick jerk supposedly rid the victim, not only of the lock but the disease as well.

The ancient Egyptians drank water from the skull of a convicted murderer to cure insanity. By the 16th century, however, medical schools had so far advanced that doctors prescribing binding a loaf of bread filled with goat's brain to the patient's head.

In colonial days spider's webs were used widely to cure fever. The webs were rolled into pills and swallowed by the patient.
