IDA BAILEY ALLEN
Enjoy The Last Morsel Hot Buttery Spaetzle

WHEN in Chicago, the Chef and I enjoyed one of the famous fried fresh lake perch dinners popular in the Middle West.

The perch were fried to a golden brown and brought in ceremoniously sizzling hot, piled on a large platter. The accompaniments: a big bowl of cracking- crisp shredded cabbage with oil and cider vinegar to mix your own dressing, and a generous bowlful of old- fashioned spaetzle — small dropped German- style dumplings— dressed with butter. As the Chef leisurely finished the last morsel, his eyes gleamed, a sure sign he had dreamed up a new recipe.

"Cheese spaetzle, Madame," he beamed, "containing cornmeal, would be a perfect marriage with fried fish."

Back in the test- kitchen in New York, he worked out the recipe at once. "Delicious" he announced, and all the taste-testers agreed.

Measurements level; recipes for 6

CHEESE SPAETZLE

2 c. sifted all-purpose flour
one-third cup enriched cornmeal
1 tsp. salt
½ c. grated Parmesan cheese
2 eggs, beaten
1 c. water
3 tbsp. butter, melted
1 tbsp. chopped parsley
Fresh ground black pepper

Sift together flour, cornmeal and salt; stir in cheese. Combine eggs and water; gradually stir into flour mixture.

Drop batter by ¼ teaspoonfuls into 2 qts. boiling salted water (2 tsp. salt). Do not crowd spaetzle. Cover; boil gently about 25 min., or until bite tender.

Rinse quickly with boiling water; drain. Toss with butter and chopped parsley. Dust with fresh ground black pepper, serve at once.

¾ tsp. fine-grated lemon rind
2 tbsp. butter or margarine melted
¼ c. milk
1 c. canned raspberries, well drained

Sift dry ingredients together, add eggs, lemon rind, butter and milk. Beat until smooth.

Roll raspberries in 1 extra tbsp. flour; fold into batter.

Turn into buttered qt. mold, close-cover; steam 45 min. Unmold.

Serve hot with hard sauce or Melba sauce made with drained raspberry juice.

The Chef Sautees Pan Fisa

Use any pan fish such as smelt, butterfish, brook trout or perch.

Clean 2 lbs. pan fish; brush all over with 1 egg beaten slightly with tbsp. cold water. Spoon over 1½c. fine dry breakcrumbs and ¼ c. enriched cornmeal, seasoned with 1 tsp. salt, ¼ tsp. pepper and ½ tsp. monosodium glutamate.

In fry pan heat equal parts butter and vegetable oil to barely cover bottom. When hot, but not smoking, slide in fish and saute until golden brown on one side. Then with broad spatula turn to cook and brown reverse side.

Household Hints

Fabric dyes, dissolved in a small amount of water, make attractive, unusual stains for unfinished furniture.

Next time you stop remember there's no nutritional or quality difference between white eggs and brown. The color merely indicates the breed of hen that produced it.

Coordinate a bedroom and bath with color- matched sheets and towels. Available in stripes, solids, prints, they'll wash right along with the family wash.

Keep galoshes clean and new-looking by sudsing in the washing machine for a few minutes. Rinse thoroughly and dry in a warm — not hot — place.

A coat of paste wax will preserve the rubber, keep them shining.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Isolated By Winter's Snow Farm Folk Await Spring

This morning it pleased that the little truck, of inestimable help in our farming, could bring a grist of mill-feed up to the yard. Winter had been keeping it in recent weeks down at Jane's end, where its various haulings must be taken by horse and sleigh, or by tractor to complete them. But today after the spell of mild weather, during which the tractor had opened a way for it, the machine came up happily, almost to our door.

Before too long, it came to mind, it will be along the fields. It will be carrying the requirements of that first work of the farm lands: the staples and stretchers, the pliers and hammer and maul, and all those things which contribute toward the fencing of the farmlands. The sunshine will have a warmer quality to it, then. The wind will be happy. No keening in it over lost scenes. We farm-folks will find in our days then a promise, a faith, which looking into the future will picture the outline of our developing dreams. This time the crops will be abundant. The grain sown will germinate to the last seed, and produce in the best Biblical measure. The grass! How thick and succulent it will come for the stock, as green and pretty as Ireland's own, and in the turn of the months its carpet will be starred with the low - growing, sweet, white clover.

The little truck will carry too the stakes, that have been sharpened to a nicety at the chopping - block by the woodshed's door. The chips, scented and balsamy, will be the cooks' portion to add a liveliness to their springtime fires.

This morning spring was near. The truck came up to the yard. Tonight however, in a snowfall which is at times restless, March seems to have settled the winter in again.

Mack had Peter by the hand, when after an evening visit the two homed through it to the house across the lane. By the rope - swing, and the robins' vacant nest in the old birch tree, we watched them go, feeling for footing along the once more snowy path.

"Will Peter remember going home through the snowfall?" James wondered.

"We never know, just what will stick to a child's mind" we said. "It's likely he will recall the warmth, the comfort, of his hand in Mack's on the way, and the glow on the snow of the welcoming door - light ahead."

"I never knew what it was to have a brother for company, or to help me" James remarked wistfully. "I hope they will realize — the three boys over there, just how fortunate they are in that way. I hope too they will remain as now, always the best of friends."

Alex was missing from the company. He is nurning a cold which keeps him indoors, a real misery at present.

"We were thinking — the weather was so promising this morning, that if all goes well with us, we might make a start at the wood - cutting tomorrow" James comments, peering into the refrigerator in search of a bite of lunch. "But this snowfall will delay that."

But not, however, our present bedtime. The old bed will cradle us comfortably, our pillows bear us off, each one to his and her own Land of Dreams.

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good-night.....

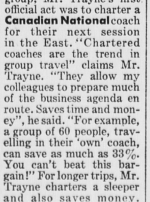
Arranges Group Travel Plans



C. N. TRAYNE

Appointed Director of Travel for his company's sales group, Mr. Trayne's first official act was to charter a Canadian Nationaire car for their next session in the East. "Chartered coaches are the trend in group travel" claims Mr. Trayne. "They allow my colleagues to prepare much of the business agenda en route. Saves time and money", he said. "For example, a group of 60 people, travelling in their 'own' coach, can save as much as 33%. You can't beat this bargain!" For longer trips, Mr. Trayne chariers a sleeper and also saves money. "When our group splits into smaller committees of between 10 and 22 men, we make sure they travel on CN Red 'Bargain' or White 'Economy' Days. Even then, we can take advantage of CN's Party Fares — and save 10% to 20% more. I recommend you call your CN Passenger Sales Office for full information about group travel arrangements!"
