Perhaps they each lack physical attraction for the other, but that does not interfere with their friendship as it would with married life.

DEAR MISS DIX: At what age should an adopted child be told of his adoption? M. M. N.

ANSWER: Before he is old enough to understand what it means. Then the idea that you are not his real parents will carry with it no sting, no bitterness, nor disillusion. Two years of age is not too young to accustom the child to the knowledge that you are his foster-parents, and that while other children are born to their parents you selected him because you especially wanted him.
