"Let the Searchlight of Practice illuminate the dark places of Theory."
A THOROUGHLY Progressive, Practical Institution, in which young men and women are not only taught Bookkeeping (in all its applications to Commerce) both by single and double entry, but are trained how to do business by actual business transactions. They act as buyers, sellers, traders, bankers, book-keepers and accountants in actual business operations, and the currency issued by the College Bank, and the misc. issued from the Emporium are used in bona-fide business transactions. Just the same as in mercantile and banking houses. Book-keeping is learned at home, but a knowledge of how to transact business cannot be thus acquired. That our course and system of training is eminently practical write for testimonials from business men and from students who are now holding lucrative and responsible positions.

SUBJECTS:

Book-keeping by single and double entry (theoretical and practical) Actual Business Practice, Business Penmanship, Business Correspondence, Commercial Arithmetic, Commercial Law, Railroading, Steamboating, Banking (actual practice in the College Bank), Typewriting, Shorthand, and Navigation.

FACULTY:

THE DAILY EXAMINER

AUGUST 17, 1899.

THE CROPS.

The anxiety which was felt concerning rust in the wheat at the beginning of this month, has been relieved by the fine breezy weather that has since prevailed. The leaves of the wheat in many fields are more or less rusted, but so far the stems are untouched. At present the prospect of a record crop of all kinds of grain was never brighter. An unusually large crop of hay has been saved in excellent condition.

ASSASSINATION OF LABOR.

The sensation and horror of this week is the attempted assassination of Labor. It has been remarked by the Times correspondent at Rennes that there is a terribly suggestive timeliness in the crime. Were the fates combining against Dreyfus they could not have armed among mortals a more efficient agent of their designs than the unknown criminal. It was a master stroke. The one man indispensable is suddenly thrown hors de combat at the moment when the most was expected of him. Assassination is, from every point of view, despicable. We cannot imagine a more dastardly crime than that of deliberately shooting the counsel of a prisoner such as Dreyfus. If such a crime were committed in England, the prisoner's case would be strengthened. But in France the reverse seems to be the fact. The crime has, however, served to centre upon the case the interest of the world; and France will fall lower in the world's estimation than ever before if Dreyfus should be again convicted as the result of a high crime.

CLOVER AS MANURE.

Mr. John McKinnon writes to the Farmer and says:

"While at Ottawa, in June 1898, I spent an afternoon at the Experimental Farm, about two miles from the city. The manager kindly drove me through the grounds, pointing out as went along the effect of different manures as well as the advantages of sowing clover along with every variety of grain, even should the land be ploughed a few weeks after harvest. One part of the field had clover sown along with grain on the previous year, the other had not—the difference was quite marked. The manager seemed desirous that farmers should understand the value of clover as a fertilizer, declaring that no variety of grain should be sown without it; the expense would be a mere trifle compared with the increased yield on the following year.

This is a point of which our progressive farmers will not fail to make a note. The clover seed required will not cost much—give it a fair trial.

AN APT ILLUSTRATION.

The Transcript, of Moncton quotes THE EXAMINER'S expression, "The pace is too swift," as applied to the increase of expenditures and debt by the Laurier administration, and says:

"Yes! It has been noticed that the Conservatives cannot keep up with the Liberal procession."

Upon which the Summerside Journal aptly remarks:

"Yes, and the reason is that, while the Conservatives are doing good, square level trotting, the Liberals are, contrary to the National Rules, running all the way, around the course. They are liable, though, to be "set back," when they come before the judges—the people of Canada."

DISGRACEFUL CARELESSNESS.

It is said that the steamer Southport is being run without a certificated captain or engineer, and that she has not been inspected although she has been laid up for two years. It is also said that the new captain of the steamer Hillsborough is not certificated. And as if this were not enough, it is further stated that there is a conspicuous absence of life-saving apparatus on both steamers, what little there is in this line not being of the best description. If these statements should prove to be correct they show a condition of affairs which should not exist—a state of things disgraceful to the Provincial Government. In the interests of the people of this province—hundreds of whom travel by these steamers each day—certificated officers should be appointed to both steamers and good life-preservers and boats provided.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

—Montreal Gazette: The philosophy with which the Liberals accepted the defeat in the Senate of the Redistribution Bill is accounted for by recent events. The re-arrangement of the constituencies would have been a help at election time, but only a little one. The machine is their mainstay, and it they still can hug.

—Referring to the Liberal members at Ottawa a few days ago The Patriot stated that "they also deserve their share of the heat and burden," etc. The word "deserve" was printed by mistake, of course. But it implied more truth than is usually found in The Patriot. The Liberal members at Ottawa certainly do deserve their share of the heat of the people's censure and the burden of the people's displeasure consequent upon the carnival of money-granting which characterized the $60,000,000 session.

—The Liberal party went to the country in 1896 with a policy declaring for reduction in taxation, decrease in expenditure, diminution of the public debt, and the extermination of the principle and practice of protection. The following figures show how the policy has been abandoned.

	Average	1892-96	1899
Customs taxation	$19,839,684	$25,157,931
Total revenue	36,412,378	44,698,155
Rate per head	7.27	8.41
Total expenditure	$42,141,763	$51,796,344
Increase in debt since 1896	5,786,505

—Our discreet and religious contemporary is in a hole—between its love of liberalism and its duty to the prohibitionists, of whom it professes to be the organ. Its Liberal partisanship is so strong that it cannot follow Mr. Duncan Marshall's reasonable and good advice. So it misrepresents THE EXAMINER, and tries to raise a cloud of dust behind which it may escape. But the people have gauged its sincerity. As the prohibition organ, refusing to ask the electors to vote down the government which deceived and insulted the prohibitionists, it is in about the same position as the man who tells other people to be total abstainers and takes a drop himself.

—Here is a pretty word picture of a little bit of England by an American admirer: England in fine weather, like its inhabitants when in happy circumstances, has a singular look of newness and good breeding. Everything is swept and garnished like the interior of a daintily kept house. The top-poles make a pale green pattern on the violet ploughed ground. In the streams, the long willow-like weeds are combed out and starred with jacinthe-looking blossoms. Fish dart like ghosts in the sunlit, golden water. And then the gardens of the old cottages—cottages some of them of the time of Elizabeth, nay, almost of the Black Prince, with scalloped weather-tiles of delicate peach-bloom colour, and brilliant whitewashed walls, pink and white mallows, and even an exquisite Japanese lily. What dainty prosperity! And, characteristically English, through the midst of it runs the past, in the shape of an old Roman highway. You can still see slabs of it, along the downs, among immense nut-laden beeches, past duckponds and haystacks. What a strange mixture of a very present Present with a Past which seems scarcely past at all!

The C. P. R. has declared a half yearly dividend of two per cent.

KITCHENER TAKES HIS SEAT.

Conqueror of Khartoum Embarrassed by the Ceremonial.

The ceremony in the House of Lords when Lord Kitchener of Khartoum, in crimson robe and scarf of ermine, bent the knee before the Throne, signed the roll of nobles, and took his seat in the gilded chamber as a peer of the British realm, was a very picturesque one. For a few minutes the Lord Chancellor lay back on the woolsack, comfortable, twiddling his arms. But suddenly he sat upright. The silent peers bent forward. For coming through the door facing the Throne was a little procession in radiant red. First came Black Rod. Behind him came the Deputy Garter King-at-Arms. In his wake walked the spruce figure of Lord Roberts of Kandahar. Then came Lord Kitchener of Khartoum, slim and straight and tall—he seemed very tall beside Lord Roberts—also in long red robes. He was in a quiver of nervousness when he stood at the door and bowed to the Lord Chancellor. His cheeks were colored to deep purple. His eye was aflame with excitement, and he fumbled with his patent of nobility as though he didn't know whether to tear it up or throw it away or give it to somebody. Behind him walked Baron Cromer, likewise in red robes. Nobody spoke, nobody moved, while this procession of robes marched slowly up the floor.

Reaching the woolsack Black Rod stepped on one side; Garter King-at-Arms stepped on the other. Lord Kitchener dropped upon his left knee, and with both hands held out his patent of nobility. The Lord Chancellor took it, slightly unrolled it, and let loose the blue ribbons attached, glanced at it, and handed it back. Lord Kitchener bowed low on receiving his patent, and the Lord Chancellor raised his three cornered hat two inches above his wig. The Black Rod led the way to the clerk's table, and Lord Kitchener walked between his introducers—Lord Roberts the soldier and Lord Cromer the administrator. The clerk in bowing received the patent and began to read it aloud. It was a prosaic, formal, legal-phrased document. All that could be heard was a sonorous mumble. Lord Kitchener stood with all eyes on him while the reading went on. A piece of cardboard, rather yellow from age, with the words of the oath printed on it, was handed to the hero of Khartoum. Holding it in his left hand, he repeated it. A big, stodgy book was opened. The Clerk put his finger on a place. Lord Kitchener took up a quill pen and hastily scrawled his name.

Then he stood straight up and doubled into a bow to the Lord Chancellor. Again the three cornered hat went up two inches. But the ceremony was not yet over. The procession was reformed. Black Rod, Garter King-at-Arms, Lord Roberts of Kandahar, Lord Kitchener of Khartoum, Lord Cromer, all halted in the centre of the floor immediately in front of the cross benches, the benches that signify no politics, and bowed again in long-drawn obeisance. Slowly they walked to the lower end of the House facing the Throne. Black Rod and Garter King-at-Arms fell out of the procession. The three peers ascended the gangway, and in the furthest corner of the back seat they sat down, Lord Kitchener in the middle. They put on their hats. Silence prevailed. The three rose together; automatically they all raised their cocked hats, and bowed with a long sweep. As Lord Kitchener passed the woolsack on his way to the hall behind the throne the Lord Chancellor pushed out his hand and grasped that of the hero and shook it warmly. He beamed on the new peer. Lord Kitchener was covered with confusion, but he smiled. Then out into the hall he went. In two minutes Lord Kitchener and Lord Roberts were back in the chamber. But their bright robes had gone. They were in ordinary frock coats. They slipped into the second of the cross benches. Lord Kitchener was making painful efforts to look at ease. But how could even a hero of Khartoum be at ease when a throng of peeresses were inspecting him through their lorgnettes?
