RELIGION AND LIFE

BY VERY REV. GEORGE C. PIDGEON, D.D., LL.D. First Moderator of the United Church of Canada

ARCHITECTURE STUDENT BUILT UP ESKIMO FAITH

The reader is arrested by the story of his call. He was a student of architecture and a prosperous future was opening before him in that profession. But he became interested in the work of his church, particularly in her missions in the Canadian north and when challenged to give his life to that work, he obeyed.

It is the old story, as old as the Gospel itself, the call to leave all and follow Jesus. Peter and John left their boats and nets, and Matthew left his place at the receipt of customs to follow Jesus, and young people are still responding to the call with the same results.

This young volunteer was required to take a course in theology, but, after one year's study, he was sent to the north for two years' experience before completing his course.

It was in that period that the difficulties of adjusting his life to the new conditions had to be overcome.

They built their Mission House in Baffin Land, but it could be only the centre of their work. The teacher had to go out among the people and teach wherever he could get them together.

HIS HARDSHIPS He had to learn how to live in snow igloos with their furniture of ice, and the bitter cold of that frozen land taxed his endurance to the utmost. Still harder to take was the lack of privacy. Still harder was it to watch the

"I was the daughter of a Hudson Bay factor, and when Mr. Walton came to our district as a missionary, I used to interpret for him. But when I heard him holding up those lofty New Testament ideals before those people the sordidness of whose lives I knew, it seemed so absurd that I refused to interpret.

"But you know my husband — and I had to go on. Now I have lived with him as his wife for 25 years and I have seen every one of those virtues realized in the lives of the people to whom he ministered."

TRANSFORMATIONS Now the record of Bishop Fleming's work from beginning to end is a story of such moral and spiring habits of the people and the kind of raw food by which alone they could live.

But he succeeded in adapting himself to the conditions of life around him, and, as one with the people, he brought Christ to them.

It is a fascinating story with deep human interest from beginning to end. There are character sketches as vivid as those in any novel, and accounts of spiritual experiences that deepen the reader's faith in God.

His was an evangelical ministry. Not only was Christ held up as an ideal, but was presented to men as their living and all-powerful Saviour and Lord.

It is one thing to preach about Jesus of Nazareth as an historical figure; it is a different matter to present Him as a personal Reality present with all His power and available to anyone who will believe.

These people did believe; the way they opened their hearts to the messenger and the message showed that the Spirit of God was at work in those who heard as well as in those who taught.

They were freed from fear; they were emancipated from the tyranny of the evil in their own nature. Hate was replaced by love the mind expanded by a study of divine truth; in reading the story of their intellectual and moral development one got new insight into the meaning of Christ's promise: "You shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

The missionary writes: "Gradually, slowly, testing step by step the authority of our message, the men and women were wooed and won by the Saviour's Divine Sacrifice, and they began to leave behind their old ways and to walk 'in the Jesus way,' as they called it. Quietly and persuasively the tidings of salvation transformed their thoughts, their ideas and their inner life. The transition stage was — and still is — difficult for all. It takes courage and conviction to forsake all and follow Him."
