

On Saturday last, the Courier arrived in town with the English Mail, which had been anxiously looked for some days. We are thus put in possession of English dates to the 11th of November. Our extracts, which are pretty copious, we trust, be found interesting.

On Saturday last the birth of a Prince of Wales and heir apparent to the Crown, was announced to the citizens of Charlottetown by a salvo of 42 guns fired from the garrison.

In our present number will be found two communications on the subject of the proposed Steam communication between this and the adjacent Provinces, a measure to which we wish every success. Notwithstanding the lukewarmness exhibited by many who might have been expected to have taken an interest in a matter of such great public importance, we are far from despairing of the final success of the project, a number of shares having been purchased since we last adverted to the subject.

MECHANICS' INSTITUTE.—The Rev. Mr. Waddell, pursuant to previous announcement, delivered, on Wednesday evening last, an extremely elaborate and interesting lecture upon the "Reciprocal duties of social life." As the weather was very unpleasant, and the walking muddy, there was rather a thin audience; and as it was thought that such a Lecture should not be lost, the Rev. Gentleman was asked if he would read it again, on some future evening, during the present session, to which proposition he kindly consented. On Wednesday evening, the 29th inst., the Report of the proceedings of the Institute for the present year will be read, and the election of Office-bearers for the ensuing year will take place. And it is to be hoped that on such an important occasion as the appointment of individuals to the undertake and conduct the internal management of the Institute, on which its whole success mainly depends, every member of the Institute will be in his place, to take a part in the business of the evening, and fearlessly give his vote, on behalf of those whom he may consider best capable of conducting the duties appertaining to the offices to be filled up.—Com.

SNOW AT LAST.—During the greater part of yesterday the snow fell pretty steadily, and there being little wind and a hard frozen surface, great expectations were entertained of good winter travelling. Alas! however, towards the evening the snow turned into rain, and the roads and surrounding fields are again as wet and plashy as ever.

DEPARTURE.—The cargo of the Uncle Sam, which sailed on Thursday for Boston, consisting of 7323 bus. of Oats, was threshed out, winnowed, put into bags, and carted on board the vessel, during the short space of five days. The Invoice price, all charges and expenses included, amounted, when on board the vessel, to 1s. 11 1/2d. per bushel. We understand the price of Oats is now a shade lower in the market.

The Bishop of Nova Scotia has been pleased to appoint the Rev. L. C. JENKINS, Rector of Charlottetown, "Ecclesiastical Commissary for Prince Edward Island."—Gaz.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE COLONIAL HERALD.

Sir: I have, in common with many of your readers, been not a little amused at the letter of your correspondent, PETER PACKTHREAD, which appeared in your last week's paper. Indeed, whilst I write, I can scarcely do otherwise than laugh at the adroit mixture of apparent truth with real inaccuracy, displayed in it. But though I am amused with the epistle of your correspondent, I cannot allow him to knock to pieces the motives of the poor "grandeess," without trying at least to hinder him in his purpose. There is a point where forbearance must stop; and having duly laughed at him, I would fain set him right in his opinions. When a man has once made up his mind to a particular course of conduct, nothing is more easy than to discover some plausible reason for following it. I am afraid PETER PACKTHREAD is in this case. Observe how, in the first instance, seduced, as I strongly suspect, by novelty, or some powerful instinct, he puts his name to the Requisition for the meeting. The meeting takes place; the affair goes not on so briskly as, perhaps, was anticipated; then, by degrees, his ardour begins to cool; PETER PACKTHREAD is changing his mind—he meets with others in the same state as himself—they express their opinions to each other, and at last he fairly convinces himself and them that he, PETER PACKTHREAD, and they, PETER PACKTHREAD's friends, did not entertain, and never had entertained, any interest in the object of the meeting—that, indeed, on their part, it was all joke—that they merely desired a meeting for "imaginary purposes." Having thus comfortably settled the point, PETER PACKTHREAD becomes bold, laughs at his former ideas, and courageously determines to attack the steam supporters without more ado. He sneers with a lordly confidence at the motives of those who, trusting in the Requisition names, came forward to support such a thing as a competent steam vessel, and affects, forsooth, to be mightily indignant that they should dare to publish anything at variance with his judgment on the matter. Thence gliding on, he endeavours to throw discredit on the Committee, and to imply that the promises they held forth were little better than falsehoods; at length he attains his climax, ascribing to the "grandeess" unbounded pecuniary resources, and wondering why they permitted any to participate in so capital an undertaking—how they could bring themselves to share with others their profits. O, PETER PACKTHREAD, it is only by every man providing himself with a spoon that the soup can be emptied; it is only by every one in the community doing his best to aid the project, that the steam enterprise in this Colony is likely to do any good. If these "grandeess" are such as you describe them—if they are so anxious to invest some of their capital in a steam company—surely you cannot imagine they are wilfully advocating an absurd enterprise. If you had but taken the trouble attentively to read the statements carefully drawn up by the Committee, you would not have endeavoured to overthrow actually proved facts, by specious cavilling; and if you had not joined in the project, you would, at least, have kept silence. The Committee did not (as you would imply) desire to deprive a man of the control over his money—nor did they wish to bully any into compliance with their views; but they did desire to offer to general notice an enterprise which would greatly benefit the community at large, whilst it promised a handsome return to the shareholders themselves. By no hope of excessive profit—by no overweening thirst of gain—were the members of the Committee actuated; but by a sense of the disgrace that at present attaches to the want of energy displayed amongst us—by a feeling that only by a general and public effort could that disgrace be wiped off.

Let me conclude, I would say a few words to my fellow Colonists. Men of Prince Edward Island, let no paltry excuse prevent you from acting in a public-spirited and liberal manner. Where is the energy that drove you or your forefathers to quit your native soil, and to seek a home in this, then unknown, land? Has the plenty that you possess so blunted your perseverance, that you now wish for, desire no more than the mere food you can so easily obtain—if so, lamentably have you fallen from your ancient strength of character. It was not by treating with ridicule every effort at improvement—it was not by following only the path of custom—that your native land attained her eminence; it was from no fortuitous chance, no happy freak of fortune, that her prosperity arose. Had her people waited till some more courageous than they urged them, spite of themselves, on the path open before them, they would never have become what they are at this day. Through patient and persevering industry, undaunted by difficulties, unchecked by disappointments, Britain gained her supremacy—then her commerce was extended to the remotest corners of the world, and her merchants became the mates of Princes—and to you a like career is open. At present your activity is but small; only you yourselves can improve yourselves. Go where you will, there is an evident deficiency in every part of the Island—the farms are cultivated so as to yield but a scanty return—without science or great care; your communication with the world at large is imperfect. The manifold advantages you might derive from an extended intercourse, are lost to you. By circumstances beyond your control, you are shut out from the continent during the winter months; your efforts during the rest of the year should therefore be the greater. By giving yourselves a more certain means of communication, you will at once increase your importance; your markets will be more frequented, your produce will find more numerous purchasers. Had a few individuals undertaken the steam vessel, it would probably have paid an adequate return; but then the most important part of the whole enterprise would have been incomplete. The general interest in the affair would then be small—the energies of the people would not be with it. But let all aid in the project; let all have it at heart; let the farmer, and the merchant, and the mechanic, alike contribute their aid, and they will not stop at so small an end as a successful Steam Company. That will be but the stepping stone to a long course of public improvements, which shall at length raise Prince Edward Island to that importance which its natural advantages so pre-eminently entitle it to.

I am, your obedient servant, VAPOR.

Charlottetown, Dec. 17, 1841.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE COLONIAL HERALD.

SIR:—In your paper of Saturday last, I noticed a letter from the Committee appointed at a Public Meeting, for the formation of a Steam Company in this Island, showing what has been done towards its accomplishment, and setting forth the great advantages this Island would derive, by placing a steamer on the contemplated line. The gentlemen composing that Committee propose to raise a capital of £9000, and state that £7000, Halifax currency, would be actually required to put a Boat of eighty horse power on the line. Now, Sir, I am decidedly of opinion, that under the present depressed state of things in England, an efficient Boat, for less than two thirds the above sum, might be purchased. It appears there is no probability of the people of New Brunswick or Nova Scotia taking the number of shares reserved for them; yet, Sir, shall the scheme die a natural death on that account? Is there not a sufficient number of persons who will come forward and fill up the share list without their aid? I hope and trust there is, and that on the opening of the navigation, we shall see a fine steamer at the Queen's Wharf, owned altogether within ourselves.

I believe there are one hundred and three shares already taken, and the sum of £1200 was granted by the House of Assembly last Session. Now, Sir, I call this a good beginning, and I do sincerely hope it will not end in smoke, after all that has been done, but that we shall raise the steam yet.

I have read with delight the replies to the various congratulatory addresses which have been presented to our worthy Governor, Sir Henry Vere Huntley, on his arrival amongst us, expressive as they are of the deep interest His Excellency feels in the prosperity of this fine Island, and of which His Excellency has already given practical demonstration, by his recent visits to several establishments in the town. I allude particularly to Mr. George Cole's Steam Mill and Brewery, Mr. Watson Duchemin's ingenious machinery for Block-making, and Mr. John Jury's Hopper—with all of which, I understand, His Excellency expressed himself highly pleased. Now, Sir, it is surely not presuming too much to suppose that his Excellency feels equally interested in that which, in theory at least, is admitted by almost every one who has given the subject any consideration as being of vital importance to the Island generally, viz: the establishment of the steam communication referred to. Would not the Patronage of His Excellency tend greatly to forward so desirable an object? I think no person would question it, I would, therefore, beg leave to suggest to the Committee of the proposed Company, that His Excellency should be waited upon by them, and the whole of the scheme, with the proceedings thereon, submitted to His Excellency's consideration; and, if approved of—which I cannot doubt will be the case—that His Excellency be invited to become its Patron, and to preside at a general meeting of the public, to be called for the purpose of bringing the scheme to maturity, by filling up the subscription list for the requisite number of shares. Trusting the suggestion will not be lost sight of,

I remain, Sir, Your obedient servant, A SUBSCRIBER.
