CONFLICTING

agreement on just where the shadowy line of jurisdiction threads its way through the constitution. In some cases, all of the Provinces disagreed with the Federal authority; in others, they disagreed among themselves.

Two Provinces — Quebec and New Brunswick — promptly called for the scrapping of the present constitution — the British North America Act — and the drafting of a distinctively Canadian document. A younger Province, Manitoba, appealed to the conference to move carefully in any proposal to discard an act which had proved useful in the past.

Ontario's Premier Frost felt the conference should concern itself solely with the mechanics of how the constitution can be amended in this country. The touchy questions of jurisdiction and interpretation, he suggested, could be left to work themselves out.

Manitoba and British Columbia disagreed.

To Mr. Duplessis' call for a British declaration of Canadian Sovereignty, Mr. St. Laurent suggested that Canada first should tell Britain to whom she was to abdicate the power to amend the B.N.A. Act. That was something Canadians themselves would have to decide.

Premier Jones of Prince Edward Island said his Province entered confederation because it was offered continuous communications with the mainland and it needed money to buy out its British landlords.

He said that during the recent railway strike, Prince Edward Island found itself in the position of having no ferry service with the mainland.

Premier Jones said he felt that progress has been made in the constitutional talks though a burden was placed on the special committee of Justice Minister and Provincial Attorneys-General which should not have been.

The Island Premier said this was due to lack of a "proper definition" of section four of the formula for constitutional amendment involving the British Government and all the Provinces.

Premier Douglas of Saskatchewan said his Province welcomes the idea of a new Canadian constitution but feels that if such a big job is undertaken representatives of the official Opposition parties should be represented at constitutional talks along with federal and Provincial Government representatives.

As regards the work of the present series of conferences, Premier Douglas said the people of Saskatchewan are "less hopeful" than they were though an atmosphere of goodwill has been a remarkable feature of the talks.

He said the August meeting of the conference continuing committee obtained no agreement on any really vital section of the constitution. He felt a desire for "entrenchment" of all of section 92 of the British North America Act might prove fatal.

Premier Manning of Alberta said the constitution should be domiciled in Canada and rewritten to represent the collective will of the Canadian people at this time. He said he was much in agreement with Mr. Duplessis and Mr. McNeil. He wanted to attempt to patchwork to bring the constitution into line with the views of all governments could not meet with much success. No time was better than now for rewriting the constitution.

He said the conference should authorize a committee to redraft the constitution. Then there would be something concrete to discuss.

Premier Smallwood

Premier Smallwood of Newfoundland said he would like to see a Canadian constitution such as suggested by Mr. McNeil and Mr. Duplessis.

Newfoundland wanted fundamental rights entrenched and not subject to any change. Newfoundland wanted to maintain her system of education and it wanted to see French and English given permanent recognition as official languages.

At the same time, Newfoundland did not want to see any Province given the power to veto such a thing as a national social security program.

Premier Byron Johnson of British Columbia said he could not agree with a suggestion by Premier Frost of Ontario that the issue be left to the courts if the Dominion and the Provinces could not agree on the classification of jurisdictional issues.

It was up to the conference, he said, to give the courts "more specific direction."

British Columbia felt the people of Canada must be allowed to amend their own constitution "in such a way as to facilitate the enactment of measures for the promotion of the welfare of its citizens as required by changing circumstances."

He had in mind, he added, such measures as a national contributory pension scheme "and further steps for the care of the health of our people."

would not mean, he said, that the present constitution would have to be scrapped. The British North America Act could be made a part of the new constitution.

Premier Campbell of Manitoba said any formula for constitutional amendments should provide adequate protection for the rights of the minority. At the same time the rights of the majority should be protected. Manitoba was opposed to putting too many sections of the constitution into a category where amendment was possible only after unanimous consent of all Provinces had been obtained. No one Province should have the right to veto a change desired by the majority as long as that change did not involve a fundamental right.

Mr. Campbell said the conference should decide what majority consent should be required for constitutional amendments. The Manitoba Government believed that the consent of Parliament and of at least six Legislatures should be required before any change in matters of concern to Federal and Provincial Governments.

The Manitoba Government also took serious objection to the Federal Government's power to disallow any act passed by a Legislature. It believed that no act should be disallowed without the consent of Parliament and at least some of the Provinces.

Premier Jones

Premier Jones of Prince Edward Island said his Province entered confederation because it was offered continuous communications with the mainland and it needed money to buy out its British landlords.

As the first of their fall activities, Beta Sigma Phi members are sponsoring the Fashion Show to be held in Prince of Wales College Auditorium on the afternoon and evening of October 4th, in which several local firms will be represented; the proceeds of which are to be used for charitable purposes. On a specially erected runway, the very latest fall and advance winter styles in beautiful day time and evening clothes, including fur coats and sportswear, with smart accessories, will be modelled by Mrs. James B. Blake, Mrs. George Chandler, Mrs. Stan Lancaster, Mrs. Ron Norman, Miss Eleanor Mary Duffy, Miss Velma Carmody, Miss Joanna Macdonald, Miss Noreen MacPherson, Miss Leah Macdonald, Miss Dorothy Hughes, Miss Helen Macdonald, Miss Mary E. MacKenzie, Miss Frances Wilson.

Commentator will be Mrs. K. S. Rogers, Director of Alpha Chapter, and pianist for both shows Mrs. W. Allison MacRae, A.T.C.M. Also contributing to the enjoyment of the large audiences expected will be Miss Audrey Gillis, one of our talented soloists. Miss Mabel McCow, an experienced beautician from Toronto will be in charge of make-up, and will give some helpful suggestions about the use of cosmetics. Lovely door prizes have been donated, as well as attractive favours for all attending this "around the clock" showing, in support of a worthy cause.

25th Wedding Anniversary

An event of much interest took place on the evening of August 31st, at the home of Mr. Lawrence Cahill, North Bedouque, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Edwards, when their relatives and friends gathered to celebrate with them the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedded life. Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Cahill escorted the bride and groom to the seat of honour to the strains of bridal music played by Mrs. George Higgins. An appropriate address was read by Mr. Cahill. They received many beautiful gifts, cards, flowers and a sum of money. Mr. Edwards although somewhat surprised, rosed to the occasion and thanked all for their thoughtfulness and generosity. All joined in singing "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows". A buffet luncheon was served by the ladies. After wishing the "bride and groom" many more years of happy wedded life, all departed for their homes vowing this a social evening well spent.
