ELLEN'S DIARY

By An Island Farmer's Wife
"Janet!" we overheard a little lad, this week come to the sixth anniversary of his birth, say softly this morning. "Did you forget?" he queried, "this is Saturday!" The last shadows of night were being lifted at the time by the new day which set bright reflections of dawn on a wall of our room. James who sleeps lightly called a bit sleepily: "Yes, dear, so you needn't get up so early since this isn't a school day." "But," the youngster returned, "we must. Don't you know we're going skating after we've finished our work?" At the door later we watched them go, the shaggy black dog leading the way. All with faces southward toward an incline which briefly shut out their goal from sight. But over its top, mile away along the fields between, Continued on page 9

DOROTHY DIX'S COLUMN

Wants Youth's Attention
Shy Girl, 17, Advised To Abandon Efforts If Party Attempts Fail
DEAR MISS DIX: For the past year I have been very fond of a boy, 20, three years older than I. He is a neighbor of my girl friend, and the only time I see him is when I visit her, which isn't too often. When we do meet, he's friendly, but never suggests dating me. I am an attractive girl, but shy. How can I get this boy to notice me? CHARLOTTE
DON'T BE SHY
ANSWER: The boy undoubtedly considers you just a nice kid who responds pleasantly to his conversational efforts. At the rate of your present meetings, you'll probably never impress him as anything else. To make him realize that you are a person worthy of his consideration, you must put yourself in a position where he is obliged to take more notice of you. Why not persuade your girl friend to have a party to which she will invite both of you? That at least will give you more scope. If, after one or two such attempts, the boy still remains aloof, better save your efforts for one more attainable. One of the characteristic (and fortunate) tendencies of adolescence is to focus affection on a well-nigh unobtainable member of the opposite sex. Then, too, a case of hopeless love in adolescence provides a trial run for the more serious emotional problems of maturity. So while I hope you'll make an effort to become friends with this boy you like, Charlotte, don't be despondent if your efforts fail. Learn to be pleasant, cheerful, and friendly with all the boys you like, and you'll undoubtedly find a responsive one. DEAR MISS DIX: I have fallen in love with a man 12 years younger than myself (I am 30). We work together, and have been seeing each other for two years. Although I have reminded him again and again of the difference in our ages, he insists it is inconsequential and that we could be happy. It would be a first marriage for both of us. A. B. C.
ANSWER: Age is such a relative thing, and happiness in marriage has been proven possible in the most extraordinary cases of age difference, that I could never make a definite assertion as to Continued on page 9

Canadian Consumer News

Consumers are asking how to wash nylons! The other evening a group of business girls were talking about nylons and how to wash them. One said she never washed her nylons, hose or garments with detergents, always used soap flakes. Could C. A. C. tell her whether detergents are harmful to nylons? Also, are nylon fabrics weakened, or do they tend to degenerate if kept stored for any length of time? Our experts tell us that synthetic detergents, both of the mild or "rebuild" type and of the heavy duty or "built" type are suitable for washing nylon garments, including hosiery, since nylon is not weakened by the alkalinity of built soaps and built and synthetic detergents. These built products will be most useful where nylon garments have become heavily soiled. Yellowing of white nylon in laundering may be caused by too much heat in ironing. Nylon also picks up traces of dye from colored garments laundered in the same solution. Nylon has a great affinity for dyes, hence only a trace of colour in the laundering solution may be picked up by a white nylon garment giving a resultant off-colour appearance. Re possible deterioration of nylon in storage: Nylon fabrics, if stored several years under good conditions, are not weakened as a result of aging. Nylon, as with some silks and rayons, is easily damaged by acid-rayons. Such goods, therefore, should not be placed in cupboards directly above furnace rooms or close to gas heaters, etc. Garments should always be clean when stored. While moth larvae will not attack clean nylon, they may damage garments which are not clean, or, if trapped in a fabric, will eat through nylon goods to escape. I would like you to know that following a recommendation on behalf of the Consumer by C. A. C., the Retail Merchants Association of Canada (Food division) passed the following resolution, which was sent to the Industrial and Development Council of Canada, Meat Packers, and to the major meat packing companies. "That the retail trade is against the use of the striped bacon wrapper, believing it to be against the best interests of the consumer." C. A. C. in addition, now numbers the Federation of Agriculture, Ontario Hog Breeders' Association, and Canadian Swine Breeders' Association in support of eliminating red striped wrappers. However, in spite of this we see a lot of these packages in our stores lately. If you buy one, have your merchant open it up for you, so you can see if the fat is tucked out of eight and don't be fooled by the red striped wrapper. Helen Lawson, Prov. President.

That Body Of Yours

MORE ABOUT THE MOBILE UNIT OF THE ARTHRITIS AND RHEUMATISM SOCIETY
Physicians, patients, and the families of patients are well aware of the difficulty and, in some cases, actual impossibility of having patients suffering with rheumatism and arthritis obtain the necessary physiotherapy (treatment by heat, electricity, massage). That this is needed in the home of the patient was mentioned some weeks ago in discussing the work of the mobile unit of the Canadian Arthritis and Rheumatism Society. This mobile unit with physician and nurse moves into a community and brings these healing measures right to the patient's bedside in the home. In Clinical and Laboratory Notes in the Canadian Medical Association Journal, we read: "Supplementing the general practitioner in care of arthritic patients is the mobile physiotherapy service of the Canadian Arthritis and Rheumatism Society. Approximately 30 mobile units operating in more than 24 scattered cities across Canada are bringing needed treatment to increasing numbers of homebound arthritic of any qualified doctor practically all types of rheumatic disease are accepted for treatment although rheumatoid arthritis (commonest type of arthritis where ends of bone grow extra tissue or have their tissue destroyed) is the most frequent diagnosis in cases treated. The article points out the well observed fact that the crippling effects of rheumatoid arthritis can be largely averted if early diagnosis and prompt treatment are. Unfortunately, if prompt treatment is not given and the ends of the bone have been overgrown or wasted to some extent, not much can be done except give relief from pain. It can thus readily be seen how important the mobile unit home treatment can be in cases where hospitalization is possible. "The mobile unit accept patients in many ways—those referred from hospital clinics, from general practitioners, and from social agencies. If a patient, having heard of the Society, contacts the physiotherapist for aid, he is referred back to his own doctor to request treatment." The patient while undergoing this physiotherapy still remains the patient of his doctor and is under his supervision, the physiotherapist reporting progress of the patient to his doctor. In addition to the actual treatment given, the physiotherapist outlines an exercise program which combined with rest and carried out regularly will help prevent deformity and improve muscle tone, joint function and posture. Certainly, the work done by the Arthritis and Rheumatism Society everywhere deserves the financial help of the community.

The Stars Say ...

By Genevieve Kemble
For Tomorrow's tensions you may have experienced for the past couple of days should disappear tomorrow if you will take time for quiet, meditative contemplation. This does not mean that you should spend the day in complete idleness, of course. But relaxing and realizing that most of the things you worried about didn't happen, should act as a guide for the future. Once calm in mind, aim to improve relationships with others. The day is a good one for writing letters, indulging in creative activity, performing gracious gestures which, you may be surprised to learn, are received with far more appreciation and enthusiasm than you might believe. For the Birthday If tomorrow is your birthday, you will find the year ahead a most satisfactory one. Long-pending business transactions should be concluded satisfactorily and, by the end of the year, you should find yourself closer to achieving your ambitions than you believe possible at this time. You will find that many of your achievements are preceded by some unexpected change, and unforeseen benefits may accrue through travel, a new invention or the favors of highly placed persons. While romance is also favored, do not depend on Continued on page 9

Modern Etiquette

By Roberta Lee
Q. Is it necessary for a guest to make some polite remark to his hostess when bidding her good-night, and if so, what?
A. This is much better than an abrupt "goodnight." Make some such comment as, "Your dinner was delicious," or, "I really did enjoy our bridge game," or whatever the party may have been.
Q. Is it considered good taste to have the gift cards displayed with the wedding gifts?
A. This is optional, although it is becoming increasingly popular to display the cards with the gifts.
