Let's Talk It Over

Much has been written about the failure to satisfy the needs of the brilliant pupil in the school, and we hasten to agree that there is probably much potential ability not adequately developed in the classroom.

But at the other end of the scale there is also very often a need for reform. We refer to the plodding pupil who gets pushed along through the grades until he is so far over his bewildered head in the educational whirlpool that he is rarely able to come up for air.

Of course, if you ask him, he'll probably tell you he'd rather be in Grade X then in Grades VII or VIII where he belongs. He's with his old associates, for one thing, and also there is a certain prestige attached to belonging to the upper brackets. Demoting him would displease him greatly, and even perhaps offend his parents, if they do not understand the situation. But sending him back to his proper level would be a favor to him just the same.

Living with frustration, day after day, as the overgraded pupil does, must have a serious impact on his character. He must have developed a real bouncing inferiority complex by the time he leaves school. He will have become so accustomed to failure that to expect him to achieve success in anything in his post-school days is asking a lot.

Fortune Bridge Christmas Concert

The Christmas Concert of Fortune Bridge School was staged in the Community Hall on December 20th. Parents, children and teachers cooperated to make the affair the success that it was. The Women's Institute purchased a supply of ornaments. Electric lights furnished by Fred and Everett Aitken added the finishing touches.

Santa arrived in tip-top form, and presented gifts and treats to over sixty children. Mr. Harry Burke acted as chairman in his usual efficient manner, and Mrs. Charles Aitken provided piano music for the various numbers.

The following is the program: Opening Chorus, "Deck the Halls"; Welcome, Richard Dixon; Recitation, Margaret Conahan and Marilyn Townshend; Song-"Are You mine"?, Boys and girls; Dialogue, Santa's Helpers, Junior Pupils; Duet, "Let's Pretend" by Kay Conahan and Hazel Davison; Encore, "I'm Dreaming of a White Christmas"; Recitation, "Merry Christmas" Francis Dixon; Acrostic, Christmas thought; Action song, Primary Pupils, Lullaby; Dialogue, Heck Says It; Alva Townshend, Marion Dingwell, Roddy Aitken, Hazel Davison, Marion Larkin, Aubrey Aitken, Douglas Coffin, Marilyn Townshend, Barry Dingwell.

Exercise, We Belong to Christmas, Bells, Trees, Candles, Presents; Christmas Star and Santa Claus, juniors with letters; Song, Where Do You Live Santa Claus; Action Recitation, Seven Happy Cooks; Rose Drill in Costume, Senior girls; Solo, "Galway Bay"-Kay Conohan; Encore, Tap dance; Pageant, The First Christmas Eve, Story of the Babe in the Manger, with Reader, Carollers, Shepherds, Ange Recitation, Christmas gifts, Brenda Bennett; Dialogue, Wanted a Housekeeper, Barry Dingwell, Roddy Aitken, Georgina Jackson, Evelyn Wilt, Kay Conohan, Hazel Douison, Richard Dixon, Hazel Aitken; Song, May You Never Be Alone Like Me, by four girls; Recitation, by Stanley Wilt; Song, Silver Bells, by four girls; Dialogue, Disappointing Dinah M. Conohan and Evelyn Wilt; Closing, Goodnight.

Teachers, E. Francis and J. Stead.

The First Shall Be Last

A modern setting for the old adage, "the first shall be last", is the above section of Water Street East in Summerside where the very first primary lines were erected after the storm, and where, three weeks later, housholders on the south side of the street are still awaiting electricity.

With the exception of the Water Street East area, a section of Hawthorn Street, and some short streets on the west side of Upper Duke Street electrical services have now been restored to the entire town, and officials of the Electric Light Department expressed the hope that these last areas would receive attention by Sunday night.

They said that in areas where temporary lines were built during the early days of the emergency, these installations would be replaced with permanent lines.

TIMELY NOTES ON FUR TOPICS

Some weeks ago Newfoundland mink ranchers at Blaketown took a day off to witness the slaughtering of pot-head whales that proved a cheap meat supply for their mink. A number of them motored to Chapel Arm where they saw first hand the whales being driven ashore and harpooned and later processed. The whales, after they are killed, are pulled upon a large platform where they are pelted for their fat and carcassed for their meat.

The meat is immediately stripped off the carcass, washed, loaded on trucks and taken to a processing plant where it is delivered to ranchers. Such a speedy process assures a fresh supply of meat. The meat is dark and provides an excellent feed for mink. Together with fish and compounded feed, whale meat helps provide a well balanced diet. Mink are thriving very well on it.

At Chapel Arm the other day, the ranchers witnessed a drive of some three hundred whales. This was one of the big drives of the season. It is probably the last, as sufficient meat has been procured to supply ranchers until next whaling season. In addition to Chapel Arm pot-head whales are also driven ashore at New Harbour.

This past summer fishermen at Charleston were also successful in driving ashore some four hundred whales. Pot-head whales are plentiful around the east coast this season and bigger drives could have been made if there were a larger market for the meat. Biggest and almost sole market are the mink ranchers at Blaketown and Whitburn. Some of the largest ranches in Canada have recently been established there.

PROTEIN FOR MINK

Robert Lalor, M.S., nutritionist with the Heger Products Company of North St. Paul, Minnesota, writes on the significance of protein in mink ration: It is true that no one essential nutrient is any more important basically than another because all must be present in the right proportious for adequate nutrition. However, in practical feeding one nutrient such as protein may take on more apparent significance because of supply, cost or other factors.

Most practical mink rations are high in protein in comparison to the mink's requirement for this nutrient. For example, a ration consisting of 20 percent horse meat, 35 percent fish, 15 percent tripe, 10 percent liver and 20 percent cereal contains about 41 percent protein on a dry matter basis (about 17 percent on wet basis). Compare this to the actual requirement of from 22 to 26 percent (on dry basis) for growing mink between the ages of 7 and 16 weeks. Mink from 16 weeks of age to maturity appear to require 16 to 22 percent protein on a dry basis These requirements have been published by Bassett.

While the above requirements may not be high enough for maximum storage of nitrogen, they are high enough for normal fast growth. Since the average mink ration is very high in protein it is easily understood why we should not be too concerned about a certain product being 1 or 2 percent lower in protein than another.

AVAILABILITY

More important is the availability and quality of that protein. This is a significant consideration with packing house by-products. There are differences in the amino acid compositions of the proteins in the several by-products being offered mink ranchers. A by-product containing 15 percent protein with little or no connective tissue and grissle would make better mink food than another by-product containing 17 or 18 percent protein with considerable connective tissue and grissle and lower digestibility. The latter product can usually be found in the droppings intact, indicating little if any digestion.

The true significance of the amino acid composition of some by-products is not known because we know virtually nothing about the amino acid requirements of mink. However, we have a fair idea based on the amounts required by other animals. There are, of course, exceptions where the mink ration does not supply excess or adequate protein. For example, where too much fat is fed food consumption is reduced to the point where not enough protein is consumed. A low level of fat is desirable for breeding and whelping.

MACNEILL RANCH

We had the pleasure of a visit from George MacNeill, who with his brother John is located in Whitburn, some 70 miles from St. John's, Newfoundland. It will be remembered that George brought some 750 bred female mink by plane from Fort Qu'Appelle, Sask, to a newly constructed ranch at the above place. There was a tremendous lot of difficulty about this operation as the mink had to be moved by truck several hundred miles to North Dakota where they were picked up by American aircraft. The 750 females produced over 3,000 kits which is a very high average, and these matured into very well furred, attractive mink, so the project was pronounced a real sucess.

The MacNeill ranch was greatly enlarged last fall and 1,400 females were retained for breeding purposes and 600 more are being flown in so that in a few weeks there will be upwards of 2,000 and if they have the same average increase as last year production will be in the vicinity of 8,000. Among the new arrivals there are several hundred of the most valuable mutations, those that are bringing the big money. The MacNeill mink have enjoyed a great reputation since they first started breeding them, as the late "Ollie" MacNeill and his sons George and John have been close students of genetics and personally went to the best ranches in the United States and Canada and made their selections. For that reason many will be looking to them for breeding stock.

COSTS

As our readers are aware, Premier J. R. Smallwood, whose foresight has been the reason why Newfoundland is becoming great industrially, saw the possibilities of mink farming on a large scale in the Whitburn locality. It is near this place that the pot-head whales mentioned above are harvested, so concessions were given and a large building erected which serves the purpose of a central kitchen where thousands of pounds of whale meat are ground daily, mixed with cereals and delivered to the mink farmers.

It is a co-operative project of which George MacNeill is president. The feed averages less than five cents per pound and that means that mink can be more economically produced there than any part of the United States or Canada. The total cost of producing a mink runs from $10. to $12. In Fort Qu'Appelle the average was $14.50.

Last November the mink colony had a visit from George H. Mayers of the American Fox Auctions, N. Y. Mr. Mayers is well known to all fox and mink farmers throughout the United States and Canada. He has made several visits to this province and has acted as judge at big shows in Western Canada and at all the big shows in the United States. Knowing that he was coming a Field Day was arranged with exhibits of mink from all the ranches. He was greatly interested in what Whitburn had to show and came away most enthusiastic about the whole set up. He was asked for his opinion of the quality of the mink and he said "These mink could go to the royal Winter Fair and you wouldn't be ashamed of them. They would stay on the table."

Premier Smallwood was a very interested spectator during the judging, attended the banquet and gave an inspiring address. George said it was very evident that he was proud of the fact that it was his idea and his persistence that brought mink farming on a large scale to Newfoundland where it promises to be a source of great wealth to the country. It is planned to have a Maritime mink show in the St. John's Arena next fall with dates somewhere between November 11th and 20th. George has purchased daylight fur lights similar to those used at the world's largest mink show in Milwaukee, Wis. These lights give an absolutely true color and enable the judges to work in hours which could not be done when daylight and the ordinary type of artificial light was used.

Restoration Of Power Lines Delayed By Soft Roadbed

Restoration of power lines damaged by the recent sleet storm is experiencing some delay due to the mild weather which makes the operation of heavy machinery on muddy ground impossible. This was revealed by Mr. Gordon Milligan yesterday who stated that electric energy is now flowing Kensington with considerable being accomplished on the roads off the main highways such as to Rustico, Emerald Junction and Borden.

Mr. Milligan states that the program of restoring power to the damaged areas will proceed in all areas more or less at the same time. There is no concentration of effort in any one locality, he said. The work required is of a major nature involving almost the same effort as the construction of an entire new line.

Asked about the possibility of having a de-icing feature included in new lines, Mr. Milligan said that consideration would be given to carrying out experiments in this direction.

TO O'LEARY CORNER

In the meantime the Maritime Electric Company has been ordered by the Public Utilities Commission to rebuild the power line from St. Eleanors to O'Leary corner. The portion of the line from St. Eleanors to Mount Pleasant was the property of the Summerside Electric Light Department and from Mount Pleasant to O'Leary belongs to the Provincial Goverment. The line west of O'Leary corner is already owned by the Maritime Electric Company.

The new line will be of the same calibre as the high power line built two years ago from the Maritime Electric plant in Charlottetown to the R.C.A.F. station. It will connect with the proposed sub-station at the Airforce base.

Burns Concert Last Night At Church Hall In Summerside

Sponsored by the Adult Group of the Summerside Presbyterian Church, the Burns concert staged in the church hall on Wednesday evening was an unqualified success and reflected a great deal of credit on all who were in any way responsible for its presentation.

Playing to a capacity audience the hall was filled early in the evening and many who came in anticipation of a fine evenings entertainment were unable to gain admission.

From the opening curtain to the grand finale there was plenty to gladden and thrill the heart, not only of every Scot present but those of every other nationality as well. Plaintive and haunting songs of Scotland, the lilting Scottish airs and dances; the humor of Sir Harry Lauder, all were presented by a group of talented artists whose efforts brought forth rounds of applause.

Highlighting the program was the dancing and piping of the Fraser children, George, Evelyn and Heather, the son and daughters of Mr. and Mrs. George Fraser of Charlottetown. Without detracting from the merits of the other performers, it can be said that their performances topped anything seen on the amateur stage in Summerside in a long time. Their interpretation of the Highland Fling, Sword Dance and "shure and begorra" even an Irish jig for good measure and as a grand finale "Flora MacDonald's Fancy" were alone worth the price of admission.

The following is the program which was under the chairmanship of Rev. J. Donald MacKay who opened the evening's entertainment with preliminary remarks on the reasons for celebrating the birthday of Robert Burns:

"Coming Thru the Rye" and "Bonnie Doon", Myrna Hancock; violin, "Inverness Gathering", Irving Llewellyn; Highland Fling Evelyn and Heather Fraser with piping by George Fraser; vocal solos, "Hate To Get up in the Morning; "Annie Laurie", "Hundred Pipers", Lawrence Hancock; vocal solo, "The Torrie on his Bonnett", Mrs. Alfred MacKay; double Sword Dance, the Fraser girls; humorous reading, "Angus MacGlashen's Courtship," Miss Jean MacFadyen; dance, "Seann Truhhas", Evelyn Fraser; humorous recitation, Angus McVicar's Trip to Boston, Mrs. J.S. Perry; hornpipe the Fraser girls; Irish jig, Evelyn Fraser; vocal solo, "My Aln Folk", Myrna Hancock; vocal duet, "Blue Bells of Scotland," Myrna Hancock, Maureen Forbes; violin, Scotch selection, Mrs. Alfred MacKay; vocal solo, "Stop Your Tickling Jock", Mrs. Alfred MacKay; grand finale, The Flora MacDonald Fancy, by the Fraser girls.

The accompanists for the evening were Mrs. Cleve Whalen and Mr. James Peach.
