Soviet Officials Claim No Data On Manned Rocket

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet officials said Tuesday light they have no information about a Russian rocket carrying a man into space.

A spokesman for the Soviet Academy of Sciences and the committee for cultural relations with foreign countries made this response to questions about Monday's unofficial reports that a Soviet rocket shot 186 miles up shortly after the New Year and that the man aboard parachuted successfully.

A Soviet foreign office spokesman questioned along similar lines by Western correspondents, said he was unable to say anything about the accounts published abroad. Asked whether the Soviet government would have an announcement on the subject, the foreign ministry spokesman said so far as he knew there was no communication in sight.

(A Moscow Radio broadcast heard in London quoted the official Soviet news agency Tass as saying it knew nothing of a manned rocket flight. It quoted the agency's deputy director as saying it was "completely incomprehensible" to him how Western news agencies had obtained such

Reports U.S. Mapping Russia

WASHINGTON (AP)—A trade magazine said Tuesday U.S. planes are flying mapping missions over Russia despite attacks by Soviet fighters but the defence department denied it.

The air force denies that it is engaged in photographing Soviet Russia, the department said. The brief statement was issued in response to queries about an article in the magazine Missiles and Rockets which said such missions are being flown by bombers of the Strategic Air Command (SAC).

An article by Seabrook Hull, associate editor of the privately-owned trade publication, said such flights demonstrate that the U.S. retains "an overwhelming retaliatory ability" as compared with Russia.

"The clincher that demonstrates the United States capability through its SAC bombers is the fact that these aircraft continue to fly over the Soviet Union to a relative degree of immunity," the magazine said.

"It is true that modern Russian fighters attack our bombers with major advantages of altitude, speed and manoeuvrability. It is true that they score some hits.

"DON'T USE MISSILES "But so far no attacks have been made by the Russians with missiles, either because they don't have anti-aircraft missiles that are operational or because the Reds don't want to tip their hand.

"In any case, U.S. radar and photographic mapping missions over the Russian land mass continue with a fair degree of success and immunity. "This indicates that in the event of an all-out situation, SAC bombers would get through in high enough proportion to result in a major catastrophe to the Soviet Union. The Kremlin knows this." The article said it is safe to assume that within two years the Russians will have intercontinental ballistic missiles trained on American cities and air bases, seriously diminishing U.S. retaliatory capacity.
