Executive Director Meets City Mayor

Harry Lawless, executive director of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities was in Charlottetown yesterday to meet with the city's mayor, Walter Cox and city comptroller, John J. Butler to discuss the possibility of holding the annual meeting of the Canadian Federation in Charlottetown in the near future, possibly 1968.

He also talked with people regarding the catering and accommodation that could be made available for the proposed meeting.

Mr. Lawless said yesterday morning that the annual meeting usually attracts between 700 and 1000 people, and since the trend has been toward larger conventions the city would have to be prepared to accommodate the maximum number.

Discussing the matter yesterday morning, Mr. Lawless said that quality of accommodation and so on, has developed into an important aspect over the years and this will also have to be looked into. "Delegates are used to being spoiled," he said, "and have come to expect the best."

ACCOMMODATION PROBLEM

As far as meeting and entertainment facilities, Mr. Lawless said, I'm confident that this aspect can be handled most adequately so it is chiefly accommodation that I'm concerned with.

"One of the advantages that a community, such as Charlottetown can offer that some of the larger cities can't is that a major convention such as this will be essentially a community effort and everybody will be working to make it successful.

If an annual meeting is held in Charlottetown, it will likely be scheduled for early June, when facilities are not being taxed as they are later in the season.

Mayor Cox told members of the Charlottetown City Council several weeks ago that the annual meeting of the Federation would be a tremendous boost to the economy of the area if and when it is held here. He pointed out that in a five day period it was estimated that delegates attending the 1966 meeting in Vancouver spent approximately $250,000.

Mr. Lawless resides in Montreal where the head office of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities is located. Mr. Lawless said that the Federation was formed in 1937, developing out of two smaller organizations, that were attempting to act as a liaison between municipal governments and senior governments on a provincial and federal level.

Mr. Lawless is vacationing in the province with his family.

HONORED ON RETIREMENT

Richard W. Anderson of Charlottetown, longtime employee with the CNR, Wednesday retired after 26 years of service in the car department of Canadian National Railways on Prince Edward Is.

land, Mr. Anderson was honored on the occasion of his retirement with a gift from his fellow workmen Mrs. Anderson, the former Millicent Mutch, Charlottetown, was presented with a bouquet of roses.

Making the presentations were Earle Stewart and John MacCormack. Seen here (F.R.O.M. THE LEFT) are Mr. Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. Anderson, and Mr. MacCormack.

ANNE BUTLER and Walter Massey are shown in a scene from the Kings Theatre production of the two-act comedy, "The Marriage - Go - Round." The play is playing in repertoire with Under The Yum Yum Tree in the newly established summer stock theatre in the Kings County community of Georgetown.

King's Theatre Production Termed Smashing Success

By ANNE BOND

If your looking for an evening of most enjoyable entertainment, may I suggest that you take a trip to Georgetown to see the Kings Theatre production of "The Marriage - Go - Round," which is playing in repertoire with "Under The Yum Yum Tree" in the province's newest entertainment centre.

Most of what I had heard about the new "summer stock" theatre had been centered about the quaint and charming theater building, which well-known drama critic Nathan Cohen says is likely the oldest theatre building in North America. This is fine, but it takes much more than a building to make a theatre and Kings Theatre is presenting two good productions and has a small four member company, that can only be termed as excellent.

But so much for the theatre and the company, they are stories in themselves.

SUBTLE COMEDY

"The Marriage - Go - Round," which I saw Tuesday night was a real delight, a sophisticated comedy that was a welcome change from so called "family" entertainment. I spent a most enjoyable two hours appreciating subtle comedy being well done.

The play involves itself with the subject of monogamy, that unfortunate situation where one man can only marry one woman at one time, and gets involved with the husband and wife reactions when a luscious, and I mean luscious Swede, literally throws herself at the husband, jeopardizing 20 years of relatively happy marital relations and security.

The play is particularly well adapted to the Kings Theatre, which is most intimate. The central figures in the story are Professor Paul Deville, played by Walter Massey, his wife Constance played by Tuid Wiggins, who is also the dean of women at college. The third figure, the threat, to the contented home is Anne Butler, who assumes accent and all to become a gorgeous Swede lass.

The play unfolds as part of a college lecture series given their respective classes in sociology by Professor Deville and his wife. It is with this lecture technique that the audience is a real part of the production. During the lecture bits interspersed throughout the play the audience feels half of the student-teacher relationship.

All the performances turned in were excellent. Anne Butler was hilarious as the young, sexy, bright "other woman" Katrina Swede. She played the part with just the right amount of naivety and sweetness to make her come across as the "other woman" your just dying to hate, but can't quite.

TEMPERATURE SOARS

Miss Butler appears on stage in the course of the play in a striped towel, a la BB, and the temperature in the theatre soared about 10 degrees thanks to 50 or so panting males in the audience.

The part of Mdm. Deville was another fine piece of casting. Tuid Wiggins came across extremely well as Katrina's opposite — a refined, well-bred attractive, well-educated wife, trying not to appear jealous and not quite sure just how far her husband can be trusted.

And the centre of all this feminine attention, Professor Deville played by Walter Massey, was excellent. He was baffled and thrilled at the prospect of having Katrina throw herself at him. He wanted to take advantage of the situation and hated himself for not, and yet didn't in anyway want to jeopardize his relationship with his wife into his time on stage as the husband, he put a certain "look" after me "quality that tends to make men appealing and into his "object of her affections" bit went a very appealing self-consciousness. When he was both he was hilariously confused — poor devil.

The final member of the cast, and it was a relatively small part, was Marc Strange as Mdm. Deville's confident, Ross-Barnett, who is a language professor at the college. Ross-Barnett as played by Mr. Strange, wasn't quite a suave as I would have liked him to be. Through the script it was made obvious that this was a lover of long-standing, despite wife-and-family, and some how he just didn't make this very convincing. This may possibly be a bit harsh, he was on stage relatively little, and at best it's a quickly conceived impression.

THE THEATRE

And just a word about the theatre itself — it's so very quaint and charming and reeks with atmosphere. It's most attractive inside and out and when one considers that it's possibly the oldest theatre in North America, estimated at 150 years, and that people like "Webber and Fields" have played there, it's quite exciting.

Considering "The Marriage - Go - Round" from a staging angle. It was an excellent production considering the limited facilities. The lighting was pleasant and the set most pleasing. The stage is, or appears, very small and the four member company must be given some credit for the way they managed to move around the living room set, which was cramped, without bumping into each other or the furniture.

The "Marriage - Go - Round" will be playing at the Kings Theatre until mid-August, when a new production will open.
