National Cancer Institute Has Report On Cigarettes

TORONTO (CP) — Cigarette smoking is an important causative factor in lung cancer and is largely responsible for a "dramatic increase in lung-cancer deaths in Canada, the National Cancer Institute of Canada says in a special report released today.

Dr. R. M. Taylor, executive director of the publicly supported body, said he hopes the government will join in an interview that cigarette advertising must be controlled to make the campaign effective.

The Institute, which co-ordinates cancer research in Canada, updates its public stand on smoking and cancer mainly on the basis of two Canadian studies and recent findings in Britain. A 1960 institute statement said suggested more evidence was needed to support a "cause and effect relationship" between smoking and lung cancer.

The new report concludes that the cigarette - cancer link is established, although one institute-financed study has found that known cancer-inducing substances in cigarette smoke are not present in sufficient quantity to cause the disease by themselves.

MISSING LINK

A seven-year study by chemist G. F. Wright at the University of Toronto concludes that a missing link between cigarette smoke and cancer might lie in some side effect or undiscovered compound brought on by the smoke. He has given up his search "until I get a new idea."

The institute's 60-word report published in the Canadian Medical Association Journal, says that "the available statistical and epidemiological evidence of the association between smoking and lung cancer favors the conclusion that cigarette smoking is an important factor in the causation of lung cancer and is largely responsible for the dramatic and continuing increase in the recorded lung cancer death rates."

In addition to the Wright research, the report refers to a 1961 study in the federal health and welfare department showing that the risk of death from lung cancer increases with the intensity of cigarette smoking and declines when cigarette smoking is discontinued.

The report also notes that a report in Britain last March by the Royal College of Physicians says the strong statistical association between cigarette smoking and lung cancer is most simply explained on a cause and effect basis. The report led to government-sponsored campaigns against smoking in Britain and other European countries

Three Additional Canadians Go On Council Work Groups

By ALAN HARVEY

VATICAN CITY (CP)—Three additional Canadians were named Monday to working groups of the ecumenical council as the immense assembly of the Roman Catholic Church began its real business.

After 11 preliminary days devoted largely to ceremony and general preparation, the 55-nation council spent three hours in earnest discussion on the sacred liturgy of the church, first item on the agenda of a conference that may last a year or more.

There were no Canadian speakers Monday but the emphasis among Canadian bishops is understood to be in favor of any change that would make the public worship of the church more intelligible.

As the debate started, the Vatican secretariat issued the names of the 48 members elected in the last three working commissions of the council.

The list included three Canadians. Most Rev. Valerien Belanger, auxiliary bishop of Montreal, was elected to the commission on discipline of the sacraments; Most Rev. George B. Flahiff, archbishop of Winnipeg, to the commission on religious orders, and Most Rev. Maurice Pare, bishop of Chicoutimi, Que., to the commission of seminaries.

MISTAKEN IDENTITY

Through an unusual case of mistaken identity, it was at first believed that there were four Canadians in the final list, since the official announcement distributed by the Vatican identified one of the bishops as "John Cody of London, Canada."

This was assumed to be Bishop John C. Cody of London, Ont.

But when this reporter called on Bishop Cody at his hotel suite, along with Bernard Daly of the Canadian Catholic Conference, the London, Ont., prelate knew nothing about his "election."

A check with the Vatican office showed that it should have been Most Rev. John Cody, archbishop coadjutor of New Orleans. An official correction was later issued.

Packaging Dry Beans Means New Industry

BOW ISLAND, Alta. (CP) — Southern Alberta has a new industry — packaging dry beans for a potential $1,000,000 market until now almost completely supplied from outside the province.

Current plans call for supplying demand from Alberta and British Columbia processors but the new company plans to package in the near future for the retail trade

W. G. (Walt) Cleland, general manager for Inland Seed Industries Ltd., said canners dislike importing from the United States or Eastern Canada because of the added freight costs plus delay in delivery

Mr Cleland said the greatest benefit from the plant is that a product, imported until now, is being grown in southern Alberta, adding a source of revenue and keeping the money in the area.

Major function of the new plant during the first year of operation is cleaning, grading and marketing dry beans for the 20 growers in the Bow Island-to-Burdett area.

MORE PLANS

Plans still under study include onion and fresh vegetable processing and packaging for southern Alberta from the company formed by a group of businessmen.

Quality of the four strains, developed specifically for southern Alberta conditions, are equal to beans grown anywhere.

The two major hazards of growing beans, both experienced this year, are blight and frost. Mr Cleland said the two hazards failed to cause any serious economic losses.

Mr. Cleland said blight can be all but eliminated by use of second-year, certified - blight-free seed, which will be used in subsequent years.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1♦	2♣	Pass	4♥

Opening lead— king of diamonds.

The uppercut is a colorful term used to describe the promotion of defensive trump tricks in suit contracts. By any other name the play would be equally effective, but in all pertinent cases it leaves the declarer with a feeling that someone has pulled the rug from under his feet.

Superficially, it would seem that South must make four hearts, losing two diamonds and a heart, but actually, South has to go down one against the best defense.

West leads the K-Q of diamonds and then follows with a low diamond which East trumps with the eight. Declarer is forced to overruff—otherwise he goes down immediately—so let's say he trumps with the ten and leads the jack of hearts.

This presents a problem of sorts to West, who might think his partner could win the jack if he ducked, but West takes the trick with the ace because he realizes that South would not have jumped to four hearts except with excellent trumps, as well as the ace of spades.

From West's viewpoint, the best chance of beating the contract is to play East to have the nine of hearts. So, after taking the ace of hearts, he leads another low diamond, hoping for another well - directed uppercut from East.

East does not let him down in this hand because, when he pulls with the nine, it forces the queen from South, and that leaves declarer with the K-3-2 of trumps, while West still has the 6-4 left. As a result, West must make another heart trick, and South's apparently solid trumps turn out to be an optical illusion.

Note that West's defensive campaign, while it takes a little time to mature, is a practical one. He has a far greater chance, on the bidding, of finding East with several intermediate sized trumps than he does of finding East with a high-card trick

Accordingly, West plays for the double - uppercut from the start, aiming to establish his lowly six as the setting trick.
