ADAM BEDE.

CHAPTER XXI.

THE NIGHT SCHOOL AND THE SCHOOLMASTER.

BARTLE MASSEY'S was one of a few scattered houses on the edge of a common, which was divided by the road to Tredde-ston. Adam reached it in a quarter of an hour after leaving the Hall Farm; and when he had his hand on the door latch he could see, through the curtainless window, that there were eight or nine heads bending over the desks, lighted by thin dips.

When he entered a reading lesson was going forward, and Bartle Massey merely nodded, leaving him to take his place where he pleased. He had not come for the sake of a lesson to-night, and his mind was too full of personal matters, too full of the last two hours he had passed in Hetty's presence, for him to amuse himself with a book till school was over; so he sat down in a corner and looked on with an absent mind. It was a sort of scene which Adam had beheld almost weekly for years; he knew by heart every arabesque flourish in the framed specimen of Bartle Massey's handwriting which hung over the schoolmaster's head, by way of keeping a lofty ideal before the minds of his pupils; he knew the backs of all the books on the shelf running along the whitewashed wall above the pegs for the slates; he knew exactly how many grains were gone out of the ear of Indian-corn that hung from one of the rafters; he had long ago exhausted the resources of his imagination in trying to think how the bunch of feathery sea-weed had looked and grown in its native element; and from the place where he sat he could make nothing of the old map of England that hung against the opposite wall, for age had turned it of a fine yellow brown, something like that of a well-seasoned meerschaum.

The drama that was going on was almost as familiar as the scene, nevertheless habit had not made him indifferent to it, and even in his present self-absorbed mood, Adam felt a momentary stirring of the old fellow-feeling, as he looked at the rough men painfully holding pen or pencil with their cramped hands, or humbly laboring through their reading lesson.

The reading class now seated on the form in front of the school-master's desk, consisted of the three most backward pupils.
Adam would have known it, only by seeing Bartle Massey's face as he looked over his spectacles, which he had shifted to the ridge of his nose, not requiring them for present purpose. The face wore its mildest expression; the grizzled bushy eyebrows had taken their more acute angle of compasionate kindness, and the mouth, habitually compressed with a pout of the lower lip, was relaxed so as to be ready to speak a helpful word or syllable in a moment. This general expression was the more interesting because the school-master's nose, an irregular aquiline twisted a little to one side, had rather a formidable character; and his brow, moreover, had that peculiar tension which always impresses one as a sign of a keen impatient temperament; the blue veins stood out like cords under the transparent yellow skin, and this intimidating brow was softened by no tendency to baldness, for the grey bristly hair, cut down to about an inch in length, stood round it in as close ranks as ever.

'Nay, Bill, nay,' Bartle was saying, in a kind tone, as he nodded to Adam, 'begin that again, and then perhaps it'll come to you what d, r, y, spells. It's the same lesson you read last week, you know.'

'Bill' was a sturdy fellow, aged four-and-twenty, an excellent stone-sawyer, who could get as good wages as any man in the trade of his years; but he found a reading lesson in words of one syllable a harder matter to deal with than the hardest stone he had ever had to saw. The letters, he complained, were so 'uncommon alike, there was no tellin' 'em one from another,' the sawyer's business not being concerned with minute differences such as exists between a letter with its tail turned up and a letter with its tail turned down. But Bill had a firm determination that he would learn to read, founded chiefly on two reasons: first, that Tom Harlow, his cousin, could read anything 'right off,' whether it was print or writing, and Tom had sent him a letter from twenty miles off saying how he was prospering in the world, and had got an overlocker's place; secondly, that Sam Phillips, who sawed with him had learned to read when he was turned twenty, and what could be done by a little fellow-like Sam Phillips, Bill considered, could be done by himself, seeing that he could pound Sam into wet clay if circumstances required it. So here he was pointing his big finger toward three words at once, and turning his head on one side that he might keep better hold with his eye of the one word which was to be discriminated out of the group. The amount of knowledge Bartle Massey must possess was something so dim and vast that Bill's imagination recoiled before it; he would hardly have ventured to deny the school-master might have something to do in bringing about the regular return of daylight and the changes in the weather.

The man seated next to Bill was of a very different type; he was a Methodist brick-maker, who, after spending thirty years of his life in perfect satisfaction with his ignorance, had lately 'got religion,' and along with it the desire to read the Bible. but with him, too, learning was a heavy business, and on his way out tonight, he had offered as usual, a special prayer for help, seeing that he had undertaken this hard task with a single eye to the nourishment of his son—that he might have a greater abundance of texts and hymns wherewith to banish evil memories and the temptations of evil habits; or, in brief language, the devil. For the brick-maker had been a notorious poacher, and was suspected, though there was no good evidence against him, of being the man who shot a neighboring gamekeeper in the leg.

However that may be, it was certain that shortly after the accident referred to, which was coincident with the arrival of an awakening Methodist preacher at Treddeston, a great change had been observed in the brickmaker; and though he was still known in the neighborhood by his old sobriquet of 'Brinstone,' there was nothing he held in so much horror as any further transactions with that evil-smelling element. He was a broad-chested fellow with a fervid temper-ment, which helped him better in imbibing religious ideas than in the dry process of acquiring the more human knowledge of the alphabet. Indeed, he had been already a little shaken in his resolution by a brother Methodist, who assured him that the letter was a mere obstruction to the Spirit, and expressed a fear that Brinstone was too eager for the knowledge that puffeth up.

In Less Than a Week.

FROM NEW YORK TO LIVERPOOL IN FIVE DAYS.

A Toronto despatch to New York papers says: A gigantic railway scheme is on foot which is likely to revolutionize the American-European traffic both as regards the passenger and freight business, if it can be carried to a successful issue. The scheme, which is proposed by the Canadian Pacific railway, is the construction of a railroad from Quebec along the north shore of the St. Lawrence river to some point on the east coast of Labrador to connect with steamships for ports in Europe. The ocean voyage between America and Europe would be reduced to three days, and steamships would only be out of sight of land for one complete day. The distance from Quebec to the Labrador coast would be about 800 miles, and this route would have an advantage over the proposed Canadian route to Europe, via Newfoundland, as it would not require a ferry, and it is stated to be shorter than the Newfoundland route, for, although the most eastern shore of Newfoundland seems in the maps to be nearer to Europe than any points on the Labrador coast, it is thought that this is only apparent owing to the incorrect geography of this country. By travelling 800 miles northeast of Quebec, a point of land would be reached half as far from Liverpool as New York is. A man could get into a palace car at New York or Boston, Monday morning, take the European steamer on the Labrador coast Tuesday evening, and reach Liverpool Friday evening. A railway by the route proposed would not, it is thought, be more difficult to operate all the year round, or during the nine or ten months that the Labrador coast would be open, than the other parts of the Canadian Pacific Railway, particularly that part of which is being constructed north of Lake Superior.

The railway would run along the St.
Lawrence, only leaving it to make it the shortest route to the coast. If the Canadian Pacific railway can obtain the requisite amount of money from the Canadian Government, it is thought quite possible this project will be undertaken. The crossing of the Saguenay could probably be accomplished by a suspension bridge.

Duncan C. Ross.

HE WILL RENOUNCE WRESTLING AND ENTER THE MINISTRY.

The announcement was made in Cleveland, Ohio, recently, that Duncan C. Ross, the famous Scotch athlete, had given up his saloon business, in Cleveland, renounced athletics and decided to enter the ministry.
To a reporter who called to ascertain the truth of the report, Ross said:

'Yes; I am going to give up my saloon and shall wrestle no more. I have decided to enter the pulpit, and am now perfecting plans for that purpose. I have to-night written a letter to the Faculty at Trinity College, a theological seminary at Toronto, for admission, and hope to obtain a favorable reply; and if I do I
