

WINTER TIME AT THE CATHEDRAL

St. Peter's Cathedral presents an enchanting bit of winter scenery in the above photo taken recently by one of the parishioners. The fine old cathedral has many out-of-province visitors in the summer season and is admired at all seasons by the residents of Prince Edward Island. Also in the picture is the All Souls' Chapel which is famous for the beautiful paintings of Robert Harris.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Young Stockman Brings His Own First Calf Home

This was a January day, we suspect a little lad of this farm — Mack will indeed remember as he said "for always," in that for him a fond hope was realized, a boy's dream come true. This had to do with his savings back through the months, increased by his Christmas receipts to a total that encouraged the undertaking.

More than once recently when a dime or a few pennies earned, had been added to it, he would bring his pocket-book of "not real leather though it does just as well," from the house across the lane and spreading out his savings, invite us to "count and see for yourself what a nice lot I have now."

"And don't spend it foolishly!" James advised him the other evening when again we were taking its count. "Don't go and buy some silly toy that you'll tire of in no time! When you do spend it, see that you buy something good."

"I've been thinking of buying myself a calf," the youngster offered. "Wouldn't that be something good?"

James patted the young head. "Very good indeed!" he beamed. "You would of course" he added "take complete charge of it?"

"Oh yes!" Mack replied eagerly. This afternoon then, was the time set to make an excursion along the country in quest of the desired animal. He waved happily in passing, as the little truck carried him and his Dad down the winter-road of field toward the lane's end.

Now the sun clear and bright was edging nearer the last fires of the day, casting long shadows on yards and the fields. James came in. Eyed the clock closely. . . looked at it again. Smiled. The afternoons were lengthening! The short days were past. The year moved off on its trek toward the long, lovely days.

"We don't need another calf — not really!" he commented coming in a few minutes later for a pail of warm water to be used in mixing some meal in the piggy. "But there is an empty stall and besides it will be good for him to have something of his own to take care of. He will learn the value of money — that on a farm we have to plan well and work for what we get. . . Do you know, Ellen, he's not a bad stockman already — he won't spare himself. And he's happy in the stables. May make quite a farmer yet!" he nodded.

Dusk brought the lights of truck homing.

"Come and see!" the youngster presently invited, smiling broadly.

And we came and saw — and appreciated the happiness of the lad who led off proudly to the vacant stall the first purchase of livestock he had made.

"You'll have to be careful at first" James said following in the procession. "You mustn't over-feed."

International President Sends New Year Message

"Widening Horizons" is a magazine published by the International Federation of Business and Professional Women. The editor is Lisa Sergio. On the front page of the December-January issue there is a New Year's message from Miss Margaret Hyndman, Q.C., international president of the B. and P. The following is part of the text of Miss Hyndman's message:

"For the world at large, this has been a startling year. We now have two man-made satellites circling the globe. As has become usual with us, the year has brought many crises and tensions. We can only be thankful that there has been no major conflagration. And this year must leave all thinking people in the free world with a growing sense of guilt and frustration as we have watched the Hungarian people steadily and increasingly being deprived of the freedom for which they fought so nobly and, if one were a cynic one would say, so uselessly.

However, because we failed this year, is no reason why we should not again resolve to persevere and strive for our own freedom, and to work for that day when others can enjoy the same measure of it in a peaceful world.

To all of you I wish a happy and successful New Year, and for all of us —

"Peace, pledged at last to man. Oh, if there only ran Thrill of such surety through our human soul. Would not the swift joy start From beating heart to heart. Lighting all lands, leaping from pole to pole!"
Yours sincerely
MARGARET HYNDMAN
