ELLEN'S DIARY

Aroma Of New Bread Fills Kitchen At Alderlea

"New bread!" Mack exclaimed this afternoon, chancing to catch sight of the Saturday's loaf cooling on a pantry-cupboard. He smiled wistfully.

"May I have the heel of one?" he begged. "I believe that's what brought me indoors. Yes, hunger, it was!" he grinned happily.

He had been helping his Dad at the fencing, fitting the new pasture to keep the flock of sheep, due to come to it presently from the shelter of winter over the fields, to remain until the lambing season is over. The few early lambs, share quarters with the goats at this place and are now quite sizable.

"The heel," we said taking down the old breadknife from its hook on the wall. "And spread with what?" we questioned.

He hesitated a moment. "Butter, I think. You know, there's something about a piece of new bread and butter that... well, makes it pretty special eating. It's sweet. And it's filling!"

"Fencing," he nodded, "is a hungry job."

"Will there be much to do this spring?"

"Oh, I expect, quite a lot." "This is a nice afternoon for it."

"Yes, couldn't be better," he said.

"Mack!" Alex called from a verandah, "let's play ball!"

"Can't!" Mack replied. "I want to get back to the fencing. Perhaps this evening we'll have a spell at it," he added kindly.

This evening we heard the two laugh as they played together. And Granddaughter came to join them. Dusk was commencing to fall then, weaving purple shadows on the hilltops and down in the low of the valley. And it seemed to us, the pre-Sunday calm and peace enveloped all.

The young voices echoed in its stillness, now gaily and aged, now challenging, when excited over some disputed point of play. So good these, the years of your youth are, that are passing all too quickly away.

And what of the "Something attempted, something done," of this week with the older-grown children? It saw the farming continued according to the season - hastened, we fancied, by the image of the seedtime, to be glimpsed in the sunshine just beyond the brow of the hill. No losses were counted among the stock, other than that of the odd piglet of the increase coming these days to the piggery, which in the light of the care received at the hands of the farmers surely indicated it was not "Born to live."

For the housewives there were the affairs of the spring-cleaning. At this house, a room tidied, a curtain laundered, souvenirs re-discovered. And with these: a sheen on the stream, a bird-song, blue sky and sun. Or showers and bandings of mist and ribbons of fog above the farmlands. But, all in all, good gifts are the days that come, and today, and pass. It was John Oxenham who wrote of these:

"The great procession of the days Sweeps on and on; By upward ways, by downward ways, By ways that fill us with amaze, But ever on, they bring us; They bring us good; they bring us ill; We know not what; they are As they sweep on. . . The days and nights, Thy good gifts are. Help us to make of them, dear Lord.

A holy calendar!"

Until Monday — Diary — Good-night. . .

MARY HAWORTH

Bachelor Requires Help To Overcome Immaturity

Dear Mary Haworth: How does one help a 34-year-old bachelor solve his problem of immaturity, with which he can't cope, as he admits?

Tom would like to settle down. He prefers evenings at home—listening to classical music or sharing conversation—to running around. But he is afraid to make a commitment. He worries about getting the wrong girl and having a broken marriage.

He is forever experimenting with his feelings (he is an engineer). For example, in dating me, at times he insists that we date without drinking; or have stay-at-home dates; or go out on the town. Or he doesn't call me for a week or two. And all of this is to help him decide just how much he likes me, or enjoys my company, or misses me.

He doesn't voice his feelings. He says if he didn't care about me, he wouldn't see me. We have dated for about 18 months and until the other night we had never discussed marriage.

I had the sad experience of being married 10 years to the wrong man. Tom asked whether it would have been different if he were my husband. Loving him as I do, and knowing his character as compared to my husband's, I know that our marriage could be ideal.

I couldn't help telling him that I love him. After a moment's silence he asked why I should I love him, as he had never done anything for me. Which isn't true. Just dating him has shown me that life with the Rev. Lewis M. Murray at the piano.

Very interesting reports were heard from each group, given by their secretary. Many of the groups were very active during the year engaging in worthwhile projects for the churches. Rev. L. M. Murray Kensington and Rev. Ronald Cameron of Bequeque also spoke briefly.

The entertainment portion of the program was under the direction of the New London group and involved group hymn singing.

Mr. Gerry Martin of Amherst, N.S. was guest speaker. He and Mrs. Martin who are Maritime Conference Young Adult Group Councilors were introduced by Verduin Paynter. Mr. Martin spoke on ways to keep groups together, how to get new members, and other interesting points regarding the Adult Group.

A film entitled "The Maple Street Church" was shown followed by a group discussion.

The devotional period was led by members of the Charlottetown group, Mr. and Mrs. Beverly Simpson.

The chairman of the nominating committee, Mr. Harry Caseley, brought in the following slate of officers for 1962: president, Buddy MacKinley, North River; vice, MacKinley, Verduin Paynter, Kensington; secretary, Wanda MacPhee, Cornwall; treasurer, Barbara Lowther, Cornwall.

The new slate of officers was inducted by the Rev. L. M. Murray.

The retiring president thanked the members for their cooperation and extended a warm welcome to the new president.

doesn't have to be the way it was during my marriage. How can I prove to him that our life together would be ideal? How dissolve his pessimist attitude?—A.C.

Dear A.C.: You are a glutton for punishment in relation to men, it seems. You could hardly be a less rewarding affiliation, either in or out of marriage, than you are pursuing with Tom.

Quite obviously he is neurotic to the nth degree, as witness his crank-type self-enclosed "engineering" of the dating alliance, with sole reference to the effect of his cold feelings.

The fact that you put up with him on his terms, and call it love, after having a sad experience of marriage to "the wrong man," indicates that you are a neurotic too—along the lines spelled out by Dr. Edmund Bergler in his book "Divorce Won't Help" (Harpers).

Anybody can make a mistake, but only a fool won't learn from experience, an adage tells us. This warning applies to you. As of now, you are courting another wrong man, circling back on the same path of error that led to divorce before.

Tom doesn't qualify for marriage. And you don't make sense in trying to change him; or in trying to persuade yourself that he is tolerable husband material. It is axiomatic that marriage doesn't reform a man; and anyway Tom doesn't really want you.

As I see the picture, there is nothing you can do to prove that your life together would be ideal—because it wouldn't be. Both of you are candidates for specialist help, from a psychologist or analyst, to get on the beam of victorious living.

If you were normally self-confident and competent in the field of human relations, you simply couldn't confine yourself to the ignominious role that Tom assigns you in this scheme of things.—M.H.

Dear Mary Haworth: I have lived here for a year. I find it most difficult to meet people.

I am a secretary. I speak French and English. Please list clubs I possibly might join, to make life more interesting.

E. L.

Dear E.L.: Friendships thrive on interests in common. Become a church member and ask the pastor to sponsor you for committee work. Be political; join the volunteers who group together to support your candidate, party or philosophy. Join the YWCA and enroll in recreation classes—dancing, painting, languages and the like.—M.H.

HOW WOULD PLANNING BE DONE?

When talking about planning, let us be quite clear that this does not mean regulating every economic act or even any very large number of acts. Often, as in the case of marketing, the removing of a very small surplus improves the whole market.

Economic planning means that a democratically-elected government would intervene at critical points in the economic system. To control an economy means taking those extra actions which are necessary to turn harmful private decisions into beneficial social decisions.

We are strongly opposed to any interference which is not necessary, and the basic principle of our proposed planning system is to help people and groups to get together, plan together, and accept responsibility for cooperative actions themselves. This principle is different from that of both old parties who, apparently for political purposes, have usually played one group against another, e.g.—farmers versus labour, producer versus consumer etc. They have also favoured taking over responsibility directly as a government for any measures that attempt to solve farm problems, e.g.—Price Support Board under the Liberals; Prices Stabilization Board under the Conservatives. On the other hand they refused Farmers effective marketing legislation on a federal level that would enable them to set up their own marketing organizations.

In other than agriculture there are various proven techniques which a Government can use effectively to promote greater growth and more efficient development and distribution of the resources and wealth of a country.

There is the taxing powers of the Federal Government which can help curtail expansion in certain areas or industries.

Corporation taxes can be made higher for industries that are over-investing and lower for those that need to invest more. Depreciation allowances could be adjusted to serve both as deterrents and as incentives.

Government spending should be heavy in those sectors of the economy and in those areas (like the Maritimes) that have difficulty attracting the necessary investment funds. Conservative and Liberal governments have not used their spending and taxing powers in this way. We believe that a duly elected representative government has the duty and responsibility to use such powers for the benefit of the Canadian people.

"I AM CURIOUS about a restaurant called La Fontaine which recently opened here in New York City," observed the Chef, "Fontaine, of course, is the French word for fountain. Perhaps one is featured in the decor."

"Shall we investigate, Madame?"

ROCCO STYLE
Sure enough, in the welcoming foyer was a two-tiered marble basin, into which cascaded running water, highlighted and sparkled by gold and crystal lighting fixtures. The setting was muted jade and white in the rococo style of the 18th Century.

A perfect place for a leisurely luncheon, intimate dinner with dancing, or for refreshment after a long walk through the nearby United Nations building.

RESTAURANT SPECIALTIES
One of the specialties of the house is Steak au Poivre (which means steak liberally dusted with fresh-ground black pepper before broiling.) Noisettes (slices) of lamb fillet were broiled to serve with tarragon butter (our lamb chops tarragon in today's column are an enticing home version of this expensive dish).

Clever Chef Luis Neves gave braised celery, familiar to our readers, a new texture and flavor - lift by adding a pat of butter and quick-broiling just before serving.

Broiled Filets of Pompano took on the name "Veronique" by being served after broiling with a white grape sauce.

Economic planning means that a democratically-elected government would intervene at critical points in the economic system. To control an economy means taking those extra actions which are necessary to turn harmful private decisions into beneficial social decisions.

We are strongly opposed to any interference which is not necessary, and the basic principle of our proposed planning system is to help people and groups to get together, plan together, and accept responsibility for cooperative actions themselves. This principle is different from that of both old parties who, apparently for political purposes, have usually played one group against another, e.g.—farmers versus labour, producer versus consumer etc. They have also favoured taking over responsibility directly as a government for any measures that attempt to solve farm problems, e.g.—Price Support Board under the Liberals; Prices Stabilization Board under the Conservatives. On the other hand they refused Farmers effective marketing legislation on a federal level that would enable them to set up their own marketing organizations.

In other than agriculture there are various proven techniques which a Government can use effectively to promote greater growth and more efficient development and distribution of the resources and wealth of a country.

There is the taxing powers of the Federal Government which can help curtail expansion in certain areas or industries.

Corporation taxes can be made higher for industries that are over-investing and lower for those that need to invest more. Depreciation allowances could be adjusted to serve both as deterrents and as incentives.

Government spending should be heavy in those sectors of the economy and in those areas (like the Maritimes) that have difficulty attracting the necessary investment funds. Conservative and Liberal governments have not used their spending and taxing powers in this way. We believe that a duly elected representative government has the duty and responsibility to use such powers for the benefit of the Canadian people.

HOW WOULD PLANNING BE DONE?

When talking about planning, let us be quite clear that this does not mean regulating every economic act or even any very large number of acts. Often, as in the case of marketing, the removing of a very small surplus improves the whole market.

Half Century Club Has Meet

BEDEQUE — The Half Century club met on April 30th, at the home of Mrs. Edwin MacFarlane. The president, Mrs. Walter Leard, presided. Eleven members answered roll call.

Mrs. L. P. Archibald read the opening poem: "A parable to Mothers," by Temple Bailey. In the matter of business, it was decided to arrange for the removal of rubbish from the ditches every two weeks, and to engage a man to gather up the trash from the street.

The programme consisted of readings relating to conditions of things forty years ago. This proved very interesting, as it showed how great improvements had been made since 1920. The programme was provided by Mrs. Louis Muttart and Mrs. Vernon Craig. The next meeting at the home of the president, Mrs. Orville Johnson to have the opening poem. Mrs. Orville Johnson and Mrs. Archibald to provide the programme.

Ice cream and cake were served by the hostess.

new Murcott "honey" orange will be on sale through May. The Murcott variety was developed in Florida to meet consumer demand for an extended season of the "zipper skin" tangerine.
