Why Air Canada Will Migrate South

By Marc MacDonald

Well the Olympics Shames are over and done with for another four years. The summer version anyway.

First off, I would like to respond to the MP who commented that Australia, which pours millions into sports (much more than us), and only won a bronze medal at the Nagano games.

Did anybody tell this genius being payed by our tax dollars that the Nagano games are friggin' winter games and Australia doesn't have any friggin' snow? Maybe he got really confused when he watched Cool Runnings, but snow is a crucial factor in the success of a country in winter sports.

The most exciting moment of the whole games was when Vince Carter jumped over a player from France and dunked the ball. He deserves two gold medals for having done that. It is unfortunate that after I recover from the shock each time after having watched Carter perform another amazing feat, I always feel a tinge of regret.

I feel this way because I realize he has moved one step closer to getting moved to an American team. There is no way the yankees will let him stay here a moment longer than they have to and, sadly, he too will go the way of the MacGrady (i.e. going to an American team).

There are more than basketball teams involved in the conspiracy to get Vince in the States.

NBC (Not Broadcasting Canadian), which has exclusive rights to the NBA All-Star game and finals, stopped showing Toronto Raptors games last season. The reason the network gave was that it was not a big enough market.

Oh well, I can hope that the Raptors will be able to build a good enough team around Carter and win a couple of championships before he goes south. □
