Second Section

than a foot of snow on Montreal and district during the night.
First reports of the wreck reaching newspaper offices here about 10 a.m. said there were a "number" of passengers injured. At 11:30 a.m., a CPR spokesman set the number of injured at 15.
At 3 p.m. word reached the CPR here that one man was killed and the injured numbered 73.
The wreck contributed indirectly to a second death. B. J. Main, 58, assistant superintendent in charge of the railway yards at nearby St. Luke, was killed when struck by a locomotive while despatching a rescue train to the scene of the wreck.

Telephone and telegraph communications with St. Clet were clogged with emergency calls, making difficult the task of getting first hand information.

Hampered By Snow
Newspaper men and photographers, setting out by car for St. Clet, became snowbound when they reached Cascades, a small community about 16 miles east of the wreck scene. Cars and trucks were stuck all along the highway and it took as long as five hours to go seven or eight miles.

When a rescue train with some of the injured and passengers from the wrecked trains reached Montreal in late Wednesday afternoon the story of what happened was unfolded.

"I thought a bomb had hit us," said Natalie Sobel of Montreal, a passenger in a day coach located about mid-way through the first train.

"People were thrown all over the car and many of them just lay there stunned for a few minutes," she said. "There was a lot of screaming when the glass from the windows started to fly through the air.

Priest On Hand
Rev. Henri Cullierrier, Roman Catholic parish priest of St. Clet, said he reached the scene a half hour after the accident and that all was "very quiet, almost peaceful."

ed paralyzed by the feeling of disaster.
Mr. Grady, in the car immediately in front of the one which was hit, said he was just getting dressed when the crash occurred.
"In the first section it seemed as if it was just a jolt but then it was evident the train had been hit," he said.
"There was a crashing of glass. Then I heard the porter smashing the tool cases to get axes and saws. Another porter came through asking the people to remain quiet. He said "it is all right."

"We tried to get through to the car where the people were injured but the door was stuck," said Mr. Grady. "Trainmen, porters and two passengers used axes to cut their way through.

Washroom Flattened
The men's washroom in the first section's rear car was "flattened" when the locomotive plowed in, said Mr. Grady.

"There were three men in the washroom at the time. We could hear groans. One of them was killed. The others were badly injured.

"We had difficulty in getting to them. They were trapped by metal. We got an acetylene torch but it couldn't be used because of inflammable materials. They were finally freed after about two hours.

"The men who seemed most heroic of all were the firemen and engineer of the train that crashed into us. Both were hurt but they didn't let it bother them. They pitched in and helped."

Lucky Change
Mrs. Gloria Todd of Cartierville, Que., said she and her four-year-old son, Ricky, had decided at the last minute to travel day coach rather than in a sleeper at the rear of the first section.

"That was a piece of luck" she said.
Mrs. Todd said cold and hunger were the worst things the uninjured passengers had to contend with. Most of the windows in the train were smashed and all the lights were out. The drinking water soon ran out. Those who had sandwiches shared them.

Relief trains were sent to the scene from Montreal and from Smith's Falls. At nearby St. Anne de Bellevue, the Montreal train picked up doctors, nurses and orderlies to provide on-the-scene treatment.

When they arrived in Montreal, many of the passengers had their heads or faces swathed in bandages. Some groaned with pain while being carried from the train to waiting ambulances.
