ALBERTON — The mackerel catch at Alberton dropped to 400 pounds yesterday owing to high tides during the morning. A heavy landing of 4,000 pounds Friday was expected to be repeated yesterday but landings were very light.

Dealers at Alberton wharf are besieged with requests for mackerel to be peddled from door to door as there is a heavy demand for the first mackerel of the season.

High winds prevented lobster fishermen from overhauling most of their gear yesterday and all boats were back in Port before noon.

Lobster landings continue very poor.

Jock Beck, a Queen Scout, from Montague, (nearest Stern in picture) who was one of four to represent the province at a scout regatta in Montreal last year has once again proven the value of scout training along with a bit of initiative and assistance from John Shaw, an employee of Vero Beck and Sons, Montague. He has built the above stern-wheeler, known as a bass boat. It is 10 feet long by three-foot-six, wide, quite seaworthy, and powered with a 1 1/2 h.p. air-cooled engine which had originally been used on a pump. It has a plywood bottom, and retrofitted sides, and a top speed of six knots. In the boat with Jock is his brother Scott who also lives up to scout and government rules by using his safety jacket. The boat was launched Saturday and created considerable excitement among the young fry.

Marriage Total Is Same

One hundred and twenty-seven P.E.I. couples registered marriages between Jan. 1 and May 31, reports the division of vital statistics. Oddly enough, this is not a true picture of the number registered for the same period of time in 1963.

Registered brides for the same period rose by 63 this year with 1961 as compared with 108 in the January-May period in '62. Deaths increased slightly this year as well as reported, whereas in this same period in 1962 there were 262.

J.P. Macleod, director of vital statistics, emphasized that these figures do not give an exact picture of the number of births, deaths and marriages occurring in the five-month period. It is not a true picture of the total number," he said, "just the number that are registered."

He said he had seen his lawyer, Giles Duggan, once, in the presence of two police officers. Then he added:

"I was arrested by the Germans when I was 13½. I was not treated as I have been in the eight days I am locked up here. That I swear to you."

Schoeter's brown-haired wife was in the courtroom when he started to testify, but left with a police escort in the middle of his testimony and did not return.

Through the day, the witnesses sat in the first two rows of the public section of the courtroom, with a police constable between each of them.

Schoeters, 54, has a green, and wearing thick glasses, a dark blue shirt and grey overcoat, slipped ice water during his testimony, scheduled to continue Tuesday.

Mr. Duguay asked that his client be given the protection of the court so his testimony could not be used against him at a later date.

Mr. Trahan agreed on condition Schoeters told the truth.

Schoeters said the FLQ grew last February out of another organization called the Réseau de Résistance pour la Libération Nationale (The National Liberation Resistance Network).

ABOUT 30 IN FLQ
The FLQ had no leader but an informal executive committee of three to five members which met at irregular intervals. There were about 30 FLQ members broken up into cells of three or four members each.

Schoeters said the FLQ was formed "to stimulate the idea of Quebec independence" through unusual action.

"I was decided, he testified, "to attack federal symbols that represent the exploitation of the Quebec people."

"It was decided to attack according to these principles—that there would be no victims and that the objectives be federal establishments or establishments of the exploitation of the Quebec people."
