They surely will. We'll not that shortly!" "You haven't done anything at the grain yet?" "No," James replied, "not yet. If we were depending on the binder we would be at it, but it's not ready yet for the combine. I wish it were, because it's likely this weather won't last. There'll be wind and rain ahead."

"There's apt to be — that's so! When the sun crosses the line. "When you harvested the binder, I always liked to have as much of it as I could, in stock before that. It was always fairly safe there," James recalled somewhat wistfully.

Pleasant and beautiful this day was, with September's mild charm over all. "May I get you a half of one?" Peter inquired this morning of the apples you were about to prepare for a pie.

"They are tempting, aren't they? But not entirely ripe. How about one bite?" we queried. "You wouldn't hurt me," he begged.

So good the fruits and vegetables are — the home grown which for some undetermined reason are more tasteful, all in all, than those no matter how appealing the eye, that are grown elsewhere.

By evening the little trucks that sometimes were quite swarmed up when their loads were loaded within the woodshed, were visible in the weather. The building was filling. Tomorrow if all went well with men and gear, and the weather kept, it would be full to the doors.

James engaged in reading, with obvious interest, reports of the various fairs, and of farm shows, and of weather and glances at the clock. He yawns. His has been a long day. "I guess it's bedtime, Ellen," he offers. "We should be up in good time if we would hope to finish that sawing tomorrow."

Until tomorrow—Dairy Good night.

WARSAB (AP) — U.S. and Soviet scientists are experimenting with different space cabin atmospheres to keep men alive in long space flights. The United States is emphasizing a system that the Russians have used and may consider unsatisfactory.

Soviet scientist A. G. Kuznetsov, who heads the International Congress Tuesday, the Russians are considering a cabin atmosphere composed of helium and oxygen and that in ground tests they have subjected men to such an atmosphere.

It is noted at this date that many teachers have neglected to forward their Notices of Engagement for the school year 1964-65. In order that the first instalment of monthly grants towards the salaries of teachers may be forwarded to school secretaries before the end of September it is imperative that Notices of Engagement be received at the Department of Education not later than September 11.

If a teacher anticipates a change in status of teaching certificate or license he or she should complete the required application form and send it to the Registrar without delay. As soon as the new license is received a Notice of Engagement should be completed indicating the change in license and any change in district supplement.

Notices of Engagement should be forwarded to the Department of Education by the date indicated so that pay lists may be finalized for processing by the Provincial Treasury before the end of September.
