Educational Type Of Reading Material More In Demand

Prince Edward Islanders are gradually swinging to a more educational type of reading material according to the 1949 report of the Legislative and Public Library submitted by Librarian Miss Jean C. Gill, and tabled by Minister of Education, Hon. F.A. Large K.C. in the Legislature yesterday.

Miss Gill's report states that reference work was perhaps the heaviest during 1949. In addition to answering questions, assistance was given to study-club members and societies, and material assembled for students. Much time was devoted in research for the business and professional men who requested material on marketing and commercial trends, as well as for the rural people who were interested in farming, machinery and building. Books on Fine Arts and Music were particularly popular during the year, especially by the members of societies in this field of culture.

Circulation statistics contained in the report were as follows:

Table with 3 columns: Category, 1948, 1949. Includes Adult Fiction, Adult Non-Fiction, Juvenile Fiction, Juvenile Non-Fiction.

"Reading trends reflect the times," the report continues. "In 1949 people were vitally interested in current affairs, Churchill's 'Roosevelt and Hopkins', Eisenhower's 'Crusade in Europe', and Schweitzer's 'Out of My Life and Thought' were much read." The books accessioned and catalogued during the year numbered 491 in the Legislative Library and 491 in the Public Library.

On the main floor of the library the boys and girls's corner gives a reference as well as a circulating service to the children. In addition to books that meet their special reading needs, a fine collection of books was available to help them in their hobbies. Miss Gill states in her report that they are looking forward to having a children's room, and trusts their hopes may soon be realized.

An index to the Prince Edward Island newspapers, started many years ago, is being continued. The scrap book of local war material, taken from the local newspapers which was started at the beginning of World War II is now completed. This piece of work may not have any significant value at the present time, but it should be very important in years to come.

In October, fluorescent lighting was installed in the mezzanine floor of the library, the report states, and in December new doors replaced the old and original ones. Important gifts of books and manuscripts were received. Some of the material is very old and valuable and will be a nucleus for an Archives. Several old maps of P.E.I. were also received. One is a plan of Lot 14, dated 1869, and drawn by hand.

In closing her report, Miss Gill refers to the plaque on the outer wall of the library, placed there on August 12th, 1949, in memory of the late Robert Harris, C.M.G., whose pictures are hanging on the walls of the Harris Memorial Gallery on the second floor of the library.

The Educational Horizon

Underline the word or expression in each group which has a similar meaning to the word in brackets. (sundry): untidy, forgotten, various, faded. (remorse): fear, anger, regret, pride. (gravity): importance, seriousness, gaiety, gravity. (rehearse): enumerate, drill, dance, relate. (saunter): linger, saunter, stroll, hasten. (wary): wasteful, cautious, tired, sleepy. (benevolent): hard-hearted, beneficial, stiff, kind-hearted. (colossal): clumsy, huge, small ordinary. (ultimate): friendly, final, cheerful, dreary. (foster): swell up, deny, forgo, encourage. (deduction): prejudice, inference, production, addition. (annular): square, triangular, circular, solid. (appressed): annoyed, pacified, thwarted, offended. (simultaneous): easy, happening often, happening at the same time, difficult.

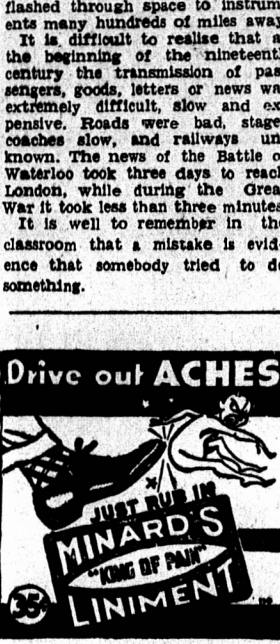

Combine the sentences in each of the following groups according to the directions in parentheses: 1. (Compound sentence) The girl listened carefully. Then he gave his answer. 2. (Noun clause) He said this. He wouldn't be able to hear. 3. (Adjective clause) The teacher asked another question. It seemed easier than the first. 4. (Compound-complex sentence) The boy thought deeply. Then she gave a response. It completely dumfounded the teacher. 5. (Adverbial clause) According to the boy, he wouldn't be able to see. His hat would come down over his eyes. 6. (Compound predicate) The teacher was delighted. He complimented the boy on his answer. 7. (Participle) The instructor was bewildered. He questioned the lad. 8. (Gerund) He and the little girl had argued about what a cat says. That had caused the quarrel. Name a disease that might be carried to you by the following methods: 1. Lacking a postage stamp. 2. Using another's toothbrush. 3. Someone coughing in your face. 4. Wiping on a towel used by someone else. 5. Drinking raw milk. 6. Eating food upon which flies have lighted. 7. Neglecting to wash your hands. 8. Drinking impure water. 9. Putting a pencil or finger into your mouth. 10. Drinking out of an unwashed glass.

TRANSMISSION OF NEWS 1. The fiery cross, charred with fire and dipped in blood, was carried from hand to hand by runners throughout old Scottish clans to summon all men to a rallying place for sudden war. 2. A Harper, or gleeman, chanted the deeds of noted men in impromptu songs, relating the news as the Saxons sat at feast or rested at evening round their hall fires. Alfred the Great, disguised as a harper, boldly entered the Danish chief's camp, thereby learning his plan of battle. 3. A pedlar, who travelled on foot from town to town, offering his wares for sale and conveying the latest gossip and news of the various places he has passed through. 4. A Beacon was frequently used to warn shipping on rocky coasts; the news of the coming of the Armada in 1588 was flashed through the country by the lighting of beacons on the highest points of land. 5. The newspaper boy of modern times, who shrieks the latest news at street corners and railway approaches. 6. A modern Postman, the outcome of Sir Roland Hill's great postal reform in 1837, when the Penny Post was introduced. 7. The Heliograph as used in the army for flashing signals by sunlight falling on a mirror. The word means sun-writer. 8. The Mail Train that conveys bags of letters from town to town. 9. Mail boats which convey mail bags to any part of the world. 10. The Carrier Pigeon which was used during the Great War from aeroplanes, ships, army headquarters. 11. Signalling Flares which are used in the army and by scouts for making rapid signs which can be understood by those who know the code. 12. Telegraph Wires, along which electricity is conveyed to an apparatus which records a message. (Distant writer). The telegraph came into use about 1840. By means of submarine cables, telegrams can be flashed to distant parts of the world. 13. The Telephone is an instrument for reproducing sound at a distance by means of electricity. 14. The Aeroplane, which is now used for carrying mails between certain places.

15. The Wireless Telegraph, by means of which signals can be flashed through space to instruments many hundreds of miles away. It is difficult to realize that at the beginning of the nineteenth century the transmission of passengers, goods, letters or news was extremely difficult, slow and expensive. Roads were bad, stagecoaches slow, and railways unknown. The news of the Battle of Waterloo took three days to reach London, while during the Great War it took less than three minutes. It is well to remember in the classroom that a mistake is evidence that somebody tried to do something.
