ELLEN'S DIARY

Hot Soup Is Appetizing As Cooler Days Arrive

"Done!" James reported with a pleased smile of the reaping and stooking when he and a pair of hungry lads came in to supper this evening. "And not before time," he offered. "The grain is now past being ripe."

And what was our supper which came in the near-dusk with the bright of the moonrise showing between a pair of barns' eaves and over the dim of a near wooded hill? And the cows in the front meadow sensing the milking-time nearing, followed a path which led toward their stable—to get their dots of grain and to nurse their own youngsters and others. A last foraging hen lingered at the poultry house door. A cat gray as the shadows then, in the depths of the valley, padded across the barnyard, barnward. Up the short cut from the mill, the long-furred black cat homed from his mysterious missions of the day to join his kind at their supper.

One of the supper's dishes for our harvesters was soup obviously well appreciated as an appetizer against the coolness without. Now the new of many vegetables goes into the soup pot so that it must if ever be nourishing too. "What are you brewing?" Mack had asked coming by after school. "Soup."

"And what are you putting into it now?"

"Corn."

"Oh! Is it off an ear from the garden?"

"Yes."

"Is it," he grinned 'fitten'?"

"It's 'fitten'."

"Then come and help me gather some for our supper tomorrow before the coons come and break it all down, and steal the ears away. They did last year, remember?"

Soup... and home-cured bacon, eggs and slices of potato the supper was. And bread, and the rolls we had mixed and baked this morning and as always guests favored by the lads our guests.

"Remember," one grinned to the other "never cut open a roll. Just pull it gently apart."

"Do neither," the other chuckled. "Just make a good deep hole in the side like this with a finger or a fork, and fill it with strawberry jam. It's good! As a matter of fact it's one of my favorites."

"We did well today," James commented. "I didn't expect we'd get it straightened away. We've had a spell of it, haven't we? Now tomorrow there'll be the gear to get out, and service and set."

"For the threshing!" Mack smiled.

"Cool weather we're getting for September," a farmer to the yard commented this evening. "I don't think I ever remember the time of year so cool. But they're nice days for working at the harvest—the air is clean and pleasant if only they weren't so short! They're surely drawn in, in recent weeks."

Short this one was, born of the pearly dawn, caressed by sunshine and going now somewhat aged and a bit disheveled, with content, away into the dear moonlit aisles of the night.

Until tomorrow — — — Diary. Good-night.

STUDY GROUPS
Members of the Tignish Parish Council of the C.W.L. assembled, with the curate Rev. Floyd McLaughlin, on Tuesday evening in the convent assembly room, to re-organize study groups.

The group took up as their night's study "The Mystical Body of Christ", a pamphlet written by Rev. Daniel A. Lord, which was very clearly explained with illustrations and drawings by Rev. Mother Superior of Tignish convent.

A discussion period followed during which members were free to ask questions. Study groups will be held every Tuesday for the fall and winter months.

or downgraded to an also-ran status, if the love partner casually bestows crumbs of intimacy on attractive outsiders.

I think a wife with emotional integrity will make a fuss about incidents such as you report. She has to speak what's on her mind, to give the wound a chance to heal. To say nothing, and pretend it doesn't matter, is to build hypocrisy and deceit into the wife's soul and into the marriage, which will surely kill married love and her self-respect, in time.

MARY HAWORTH Divorcee's Plans For Large Wedding Disturb Family

Dear Mary Haworth: We have read your column with interest for years. Now we wonder if you can give us some advice.

Our sister is a wonderful person with personality-plus. She was married young, to a heel, and has two beautiful children. After six stormy years she got a divorce. Now she is to marry.

Our concern stems from her childish idea that she can have a bang-up wedding, reception, pictures, etc.—even though she had a big "white" wedding with all the trimmings the first time. We feel this one should be tastefully simple and quiet and have tried to tone down her plans without hurting her feelings.

At this point our parents feel like washing their hands of the whole affair. So please, Mary, help us explain to our adolescent "that she must take the family's, and the children's feelings into consideration. We hope you won't think we are stuffy or meddling old fools. G. G.

SEEDS OF DISHARMONY?
DEAR G. G.: Perhaps your sister thinks she can turn back the clock and start her love life all over again with a bang-up wedding, as if the past had never been. Possibly this is the unconscious wishful thinking behind her foolish notion of having another splash wedding, with all the trimmings. Or maybe she just dotes on being the centre of attention, like a star of the stage or screen. Whatever the dynamics of her keen desire to parade like a virgin bride, enroute to the altar, the idea simply isn't fit for her status as the divorced mother of children. As you say, let her marry quietly, in a tasteful simple ceremony, in the presence of immediate families and only the closest friends.

Her tendency to disregard the guide posts of traditional good manners, and to fly in the face of family feelings, suggests that she may have led with her chin into her first defeat in marriage. Maybe the seeds of perennial trouble in personal relations are within herself—in this disposition to overrule others blindly, to get her own way.

Birds of a feather flock together; and water seeks its own level, the author of Proverbs tells us. So I hope for your sister's sake that she has the grace to stop, look and listen, and learn at long last—even now, as she ought—that it is better to cooperate than to dominate in family life, if happiness is her objective. M. H.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Jim and I have been married 18 years. At home he is a devoted husband and father, whom I adore. But among friends, when he has a few drinks, he shows some other girl with attentions. The latest incident included a passionate parting kiss to the girl.

I firmly believed married persons shouldn't ask for temptation and we have agreed not to go out except with two select couples.

All this breaks my heart. I am ill for about a month after each episode. Should I ignore these things or discuss them? Either way my heart is breaking. E. P. DON'T FRETEND

DEAR E. P.: Since marriage is oneness, a totality of self-sharing, it is natural to feel betrayed

Miss Shirley Black, Weds Robert B. Murray

Baskets of multicolored gladioli and yellow and white mums created the floral setting for a pretty wedding in Summerside Trinity Church on September 5th, at 2.30 p.m., when Shirley Black, R.N., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kermit Black, Coles Island, N.B., became the bride of Robert Bruce Murray, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Murray, Summerside. Rev. C.R. Webber performed the double ring ceremony. Mrs. Eric Sheen, the organist, accompanied Miss Mary Rze Tanton, R.N., as she sang "The Wedding Prayer" during the signing of the register.

Mr. Fred Cameron was the best man, while Messrs. Sydney Drummond and George Campbell ushered the guests to their pews marked with nosegays of flowers and bows.

The groom's mother was attired in brown with beige accessories and a corsage of Queen Elizabeth roses. Mrs. Small, grandmother of the groom, was attired in sea-foam green with yellow accessories and a corsage of Queen Elizabeth roses.
