Special Account of Defence Dept. Grows Despite Criticism

OTTAWA (CP)—A defence department special account, whose operations have drawn the criticism of auditor-general Watson Sellar, has grown by $5,000,000 in the last year.

A white paper tabled Monday in the Commons by Finance Minister Harris discloses that the national defence equipment account now totals $279,000,000 compared with $274,000,000 at March 31, 1955. When the Canadian armed forces give to European NATO allies equipment acquired before 1950, they receive a credit—the value of the equipment given away—which they may use in future to replace this equipment out of new production. In practice, this has applied almost entirely to the army.

SUGGESTS REVIEW

Officials predicted a year ago the fund would decrease as army shipments to NATO countries of pre-1950 equipment got smaller.

But, they said Monday, more pre-1950 equipment was given away in the 1955-56 fiscal year than expected. The equipment was valued at $54,000,000 and thus the army got a credit of $54,000,000 to spend for new equipment in the future. At the same time, $49,000,000 was withdrawn from the account.

In his report on the government's 1954-55 financial operations, Mr. Sellar, Parliament's watchdog of government spending, suggested a review be made of all special accounts "to the end that a suitable future practice is established."

SENT OLD EQUIPMENT

Mr. Sellar's main point is that the army receives credit for equipment shipped abroad in one fiscal year but doesn't have to spend that money in the same fiscal year. He said:

"... the section (in the 1950 Defence Appropriation Act) seems to have as its purpose that of appropriating money ... without limiting the spending power to a particular fiscal year."

A sidelight on the account is that Canadian army shipments to NATO allies comprised $54,000,000 worth of pre-1950 equipment in the last fiscal year and $121,000,000 worth of post-1950 equipment. In other words, 45 per cent of the equipment was at least five years old.

In the fiscal year just ending, the white paper showed, the defence department spent $1,740,300,000—about 40 per cent of all government spending. This was $74,300,000 more than in the previous fiscal year. It was also about $35,000,000 less than the $1,775,000,000 Parliament appropriated for defence. In the 1954-55 fiscal year, Parliament appropriated $1,908,000,000 for defence but the department did not use $239,000,000 of this.
