

Literary conference

U.P.E.I. will be hosting the 13th annual Atlantic University Undergraduate English Conference on February 5, 6, & 7th. Representatives from thirteen Atlantic region universities will be attending, including students from three campuses of the University of Maine.

This conference originated to provide students with an arena to present papers in various creative and critical areas. The process of presenting to peers also improves public speaking skills. As well, the conference provides an excellent opportunity for social interaction with contemporaries from other universities. U.P.E.I. hosted the A.U.U.E.C. in 1985 and there were fifteen papers presented. Now in 1993 there are sixty-four presenters. It is an honour to be chosen to present and the competition is stiff. Friday, February 5th, following registration, there is a poetry reading in the Faculty lounge and refreshments will be served. Saturday, February 6th, there are twenty sessions in Main building. Each of the twenty sessions consists of three speakers. After all three people in the session present, the floor is opened for a question period. Although Saturday is jam-packed with literary analysis, poetry and fiction readings, there is still a great deal of time for socializing.

Saturday evening is the English Society Pub featuring MIKE O'CONNOR. There will be a cover charge of $2.00 at the door and low beer specials all evening.

Sunday, February 7th, are the final sessions and closing addresses. The English department has decided not to charge an admission fee to observers for the Saturday and Sunday sessions; however, there will be a donation box and observers are expected to pay for coffee and snacks.

When the schedule of readings is completed it will be posted on the English Society bulletin board on first floor Main. All who wish to observe Saturday's and Sunday's sessions are welcome to drop in!
