ELLEN'S DIARY

It Was A Lovely Day Perfect For Gardening

White violets are budding there where the morning's sun wanders in along the winter beaten, "hauling - road", in the woodlands across the road. Soon the painted ladies of trilliums will blossom... Sunny our skies were today, azure and cloudless. And warm the May-wind that blew.

It was a day to make haste with the household doings - to bake the "For Sunday" cake, and tidy the rooms, and come then to enjoy the outdoors, to garden a little assisted by a pair of lads, or when alone to catch drifts of their chatting, and young laughs as they went about pastimes of their own.

Fencing carried them away for a time with the farmers to the farther rise above the stream and mill, where fields (rented) were being prepared to keep the cows and calves already on range in the sunshine there. "From there, on the opposite slope of the valley you get an overall view of this place," James recalled at dinner.

Among other things you notice that it is set comfortably against the rise of hill. All day, from early morning until dusk had settled its deep shadows on vale and hill the machines of the farming were at work. This afternoon a little girl of the name, Jamie's elder daughter returned from the hospital where a minor operation had detained her in recent days. She - Wendy - is a dainty little lady, fair haired, dark eyed, healthy and alert, nearing now her third birthday. The family was happy to have her come back safely, and with high hopes to its fold.

Increasing delights. May brings in gift to the farm-folks: winter - cleaned field to till, to sow and plant and bless into increase, green pastures for the long stabled herds and the flocks to come to; warming winds to enfold them, sunshine to cuddle them.

On fields of the name, as yet no seeding has been done, though each day in turn moves the work steadily towards it. Meanwhile seeds have been brought in, among them sacks of that seed of the haylands, we in years gone by with James, and in an exacting and exciting rite of the springtime used to mix. Now that the ready mixed is being favored, that charm of the seeding is lost.

Miracles of growth, of life, farm - folks see these days on every hand. From the soil, not so long ago dank and sodden, is the wonder of blade and leaf and flower. And seeing, we reflect that back of it, behind all the loveliness and charm is the Hand of the Master. By these tokens we know God's Near. "One says of this: "I know God's near because I heard."

The full - voiced rapture, of a bird, Drawing its beauty from on high, Its small face lifted to the sky, For all the world to pause and hear, And so I know God's near...

I saw His mark on tree and flower, I felt the drawing of His power In every wind that moved and stirred - It was His breathing that I heard.

And then a yellow daffodil Set Him upon a sunny hill - "Until Monday - Diary - Good - night....."
