Report Belgium, U. S. Close To Atomic Agreement

WASHINGTON, (AP)—Belgium and the United States were reported on Saturday to be near agreement on a proposal under which the U. S. would help Belgium to develop an atomic power plant for industrial uses.

Such a step would make a new phase in U. S. atomic policy, but it is understood that the U.S. has already given Belgium some assurances with which key members of Congress are sympathetic.

Belgium, through its control of the Belgian Congo in Africa, has been the chief U.S. supplier of the raw material of atomic weapons and atomic energy—uranium. Top U.S. officials are known to feel that it is time Belgium's own desire for some return other than money payments be satisfied—and what Belgium wants is the development of atomic energy as an economically-practical source of power.
