ELLEN'S DIARY

by an Island Farmer's Wife

"If you just remember to keep your eyes open today, you'll find something good!" Gage advised us this morning. . . . And what now did you find? Gage smiled, meeting us down the lane on our return. "Something good," he prompted, "and in the fields." . . . Daisies? of course. First of the summer, and to us, ever winsome. In the enchantment of this season, how very close, think we, is earth to Heaven.

"Christ talked of grass, and wind and rain. And fig trees and fair weather. And made it his delight to bring Heaven and earth together. He spoke of lilies, vines and corn. The sparrows, and the raven, and the words so natural, yet so wise. . . . Were on men's hearts engraven. And yeast and bread and flax and cloth. And eggs and fish and candles. . . . See how the whole familiar world He most Divinely handles."

DOROTHY DIX

Is Singleness Bliss?

DEAR MISS DIX: I'm an unmarried woman of 40 plus, attractive, have a good education, very good job, maintain a home and friends. I hardly consider myself an object of pity and am getting tired of my married friends' commiseration. They never miss an opportunity to point out that there may be hope for me, yet, or to remind me of other friends married later in life. They also express the wish that happiness may yet come to me.

Does the acquisition of a husband automatically set one up as superior? To me, all it proves is that the married gal got one proposal and grabbed it. I've had my share of beaux and proposals, but it just happened that the kind of romance I wanted never came along, and I was honest enough with myself to refuse the offers. This is more than many married women can say. They take the first available man, then often regret it later; yet they feel free to criticize us women who have been more discriminating. Why?

ANSWER: You've drawn up a very good case for bachelor girls. I'm sure it will be echoed and re-echoed from coast to coast. The smugness that often follows an acquiescence to their wedding band becomes increasingly irksome to her single sisters, as the latter become more and more aware of the advantages they enjoy.

PROS AND CONS

While there is no worldly lot as happy as a good marriage, it is equally true that misery transcends that of a really unsuccessful marriage. The single girl, with her good job, pleasant, peaceful home and cheerful associates can well be envied by the wife of an habitual drunkard, a chronic phlegm-ender, or an exasperating miser.

Of course, not all single women are happy, any more than are all married women. But those who have made a good adjustment of their lives have accomplished as much as any person can hope for. It is often argued that they are facing a lonely old age, having produced no children to help them, or give them support, in later years. One need spend but a few minutes contemplating the lonely parents of one's acquaintance, to see the fallacy of that argument.

If the bachelor girl, or career girl, has chosen her lot voluntarily, or made a satisfactory adjustment with herself if the choice is not her own, if she truly accepts her lot carefully and not as a major misfortune, she certainly can be a happy, contented and useful member of society. She neither needs nor wants pity.

A SLIGHTLY PREMATURE DOUBLE

It cost West dearly to "learn a lesson" in the following deal.

North dealer.
North-South vulnerable.

♠ A 7	♣ 4
♥ A K J 8 3	♦ 10 9 6 5
♦ 6 4	♠ A K Q
♣ Q 7 4 3	♦ 9 6 2
♠ K Q J	♣ 10 9 6 3 2
♥ 8 5	♦ 7
♦ Q 4 3	♠ 10 9 8
♣ 7 5	♦ A K 10 8
♠ J 8

The bidding:
North East South West
1♥ 2♣ 2♠ 2♦
Pass Pass Pass

West's double of two spades was absurd, even though he had reason to feel that he could defeat the contract. South's bid was forcing, so why not let the vulnerable opponents keep on and perhaps really hang themselves?

West led the top card of his partner's diamond suit. East won with the jack, cashed the diamond ace, and then led a third high diamond, his idea being to ruff dummy down and thereby prevent West's trump tricks. Unfortunately for East, however, the plan did not work out. Dummy ruffed with the spade seven and the spade ace was then cashed. South led to his club ace, cashed the club king, and when the jack dropped, gave intensive thought to the matter.

South was sure of one thing: West's early double was the strongest possible evidence that he had originally held five cards in the suit.

Taking the bold course, South led his singleton heart and fished dummy's jack. When it held, he cashed the ace and king of hearts, discarding his two remaining clubs and incidentally reducing both his own hand and West's to trumps. Now South led a heart from dummy and ruffed with the spade nine. West overruffed, but he could not avoid giving South a spade trick that fulfilled the contract.

For Tomorrow

SUNDAY'S vibrations augur well for travel, indulgence in hobbies and all activities involving the welfare of the family or the community. You may have to be unusually patient and understanding, however, in order to achieve the cooperation of others.

Even though it is a Sunday, a problem may arise concerning finances. If so, ask for time to consider and put off action until a more propitious period. Try to spend the day with friends whose companionship you enjoy and avoid discussions which might lead to friction.

For the Birthday

If tomorrow is your birthday the next six months should find you resolving many of the pressures and conflicting conditions which have beset you since January.

Domestic and financial affairs are under particularly beneficent aspects and your horoscope promises many rich and significant emotional experiences where romance is concerned.

During September there is a possibility of travel or some other activity which could be considered horizons considerably. Be alert where finances are concerned during that same month, however, and be wary of those who would tempt you into risking your hard-earned cash.

Expect exceptionally good news during December.

A child born on this day will be extremely practical, conservative and methodical in all things.

pointed sleeves and short train. Her finger-ring veil of French illusion fell from a Juliet cap. She carried a cascade of white gladioli.

The bride's mother, as matron of honour, Miss Shirley Nicholson, and Miss Pauline MacDonald, as bridesmaids, wore, respectively, gowns of green, mauve and yellow brocaded satin with matching jackets, double bandeau of flowers and net headresses. The bride carried a bouquet of pink carnations, yellow and mauve mums. Mr. Desmond Burge was best man. The ushers were Mr. Bill Ledwell and Mr. Ignatius MacDonald.

The bride wore a gown of blue tulle with navy accessories. Her corsage was of Tawny Gold roses. Mrs. Nicholson, mother of the groom was attired in a gown of haze blue tulle, with navy and white accents.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the Queen

Hotel, where the young couple received the best wishes of friends and relatives. The bride's table was centered with a three-tiered wedding cake, topped with miniature bride and groom. Bouquets of pink snap-dragon and white tapers in silver candelabra completed the table arrangement. Mr. Albert Blanchard played piano selections during the reception.

Dr. J. A. MacMillan was toastmaster. The toast to the bride was proposed by Rev. Sylvère Gallant, and was fittingly responded to by the groom, after which Mr. Desmond Burge proposed a toast to the bridesmaids. Complimentary remarks were made by Rev. K. C. MacPherson.

The bride and groom then left by car for Niagara Falls returning by way of New York and Boston. For travelling the bride wore a pale yellow gaberdine suit with white accessories, and a corsage of white gardenias. On their return they will reside in Charlottetown.

St. Dunstan's Basilica, Charlottetown was the scene of a pretty wedding on Wednesday, June 16 when Marie Margaret, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leo Hynes, Millview, was united in marriage to Earl Francis, son of Mrs. Nellie Nicholson and the late Frank Nicholson of Charlottetown.

Rev. K. C. MacPherson, grand-officer of the bride, performed the double ring ceremony and celebrated the nuptial mass.

The church was artistically decorated with varieties of spring flowers and coloured lights, while the guest pews were marked with white ribbon and lily-of-the-valley.

Mrs. Joseph Dougan played the wedding music. Miss Helen Roach and Dr. F. A. MacMillan were soloists.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride chose a wedding gown of white brocaded satin with sweetheart neckline, long

Modern Etiquette

By Roberta Lee

Q When a couple have been invited to a wedding reception and have accepted, and the husband suddenly finds he has to be out of town on a business trip, would it be all right for the woman to attend the reception with her teenage son in his place?

A Certainly, this would be all right.

Q Should a woman, whose husband is the honored speaker at a dinner, applaud with the others when he has finished his speech?

A Yes; but she should applaud briefly.

Q Is it proper to tip the proprietors of such places as beauty parlors or barber shops, who have served you?

A No; only the employees.

THE IRRITABLE COLON

We often hear of persons these days having nervous tension which results in attacks of diarrhoea, followed by constipation, and then the diarrhoea again. There are many names for it such as "spastic bowel" (spastic means having spasms), "spastic colitis," "nervous diarrhoea," "mucous colitis," "unstable colon" and others. This term tends to focus attention on the large bowel only, as a matter of fact the small bowel (small intestine) also tends to be irritable and can be easily upset by emotional disturbances or irritations. There may be spasms (contractions of the muscular lining of the bowel) and also atony (lack of muscular tone or strength). Spasm can produce either constipation or diarrhoea and atony produces only constipation.

These spasms may result in nausea, vomiting, loss of appetite and pain in the stomach. Also, the great amount of motion caused by these contractions usually results in an increased flow of the digestive juices and particularly large amounts of mucus from which we get the name "mucous colitis," as well as pain, distress and discomfort.

It is felt that the irritable bowel is often confused with other disorders such as appendicitis, liver and gall bladder disease, stomach and intestinal disorders, and even cancer of the pelvis. This has resulted in large numbers of patients who have undergone operations for adhesions, appendicitis, and so forth and have still had the same symptoms after operation.

The diagnosis of "irritable colon" must be reached after very careful examination, including the use of the X-ray to make sure that some other more serious condition is not present. After the diagnosis has been decided, the most important part of the treatment is rest both mental and physical. The patient should be given a clear explanation of how the bowel works and how his emotions can affect its working. He should be taught not to be too conscientious about his bowel activity, not to pay too much attention to it. The use of purgatives, colonic irrigations and enemas should be stopped and their harmful effects explained to the patient.

The diet is also important. In the first stages a concentrated diet is used, one containing very little bulk. Then, when the irritable phase has subsided, the diet may be gradually changed to one containing natural bulk foods such as cereals, fruits and vegetables. Fruits and vegetables may be added early if they are cooked but should not be eaten raw until later. Adequate amounts of liquids should be taken. Quieting drugs play a part in the control of excessive emotional disturbances and should be taken if your doctor prescribes them.

Morning Smile

A Washington society matron was breaking in a new maid. As the matron escorted the maid through the rooms of her home she pointed out prized possessions which she cautioned, must be handled with extreme care.

"That table," said the matron, "goes back to Louis the Fourteenth."

"I know how you feel," the maid commiserated. "My whole living room suite is going back the 15th."

Oleioleth

When cleaning oleioleth dissolve five ounces of melted paraffin in one pint of turpentine and rub into the oleioleth with a sponge. Keep the turpentine away from any flame.

Lettuce

If lettuce is washed and put in a deep colander, leaves upright, and allowed to drain in a cool place, it will keep nice and fresh.

Plants

A little ammonia added to the water makes a rich fertilizer for plants and aids in keeping off the bugs.
