ELLEN'S DIARY

Storybook Characters March Along Happily

We look back in the midst of this evening which freshens Sunday, over the week about to step away into the moonlight. Where does it go this week, we wonder? Up hill and down dale, and afar, some peaceful abode, we fancy, where all such "Time past finds rest. We look back. And are so grateful that the week afforded the farmers days of pleasant weather to get on with the fieldwork. On farms of this name, last harvest have been gathered in. Last bales of straw stored, last turpins now brought in.

"It's nice, Ellen," James remarked at supper "to finish a week with the end. Not the smiled 'then' and 'now' of one day coming up, but this time of year I've seen a day of one day make a world of difference in getting the last of the crop safely housed. And it's disappointing to say the least, if you find that you've been "A day too late for the Fair!" So our crops have been gathered in. But we do not need James' reminder to know that still remains much of the plowing to be done, and also that all the cow-kind must presently be rounded up, and herded in to their stables.

A high cool wind prevailed today. It blew West to the plowing, and Alex and Peter from their choring this morning, indoors to visit Toronto's (Eaton's) Annual Santa Claus Parade. Most enjoyable it was, made most enjoyable it was, quite interesting and fun, so entertaining, that when James came by from helping resurface the stable floor with concrete, the dinner table had not been spread!

"Now where can Santa be?" Peter inquired once, as band after band and float after float passed on the screen.

"You will have to be patient, Peter," Alex smiled, remembering the Cornell Women's Club of Boston.

Brown of Concord, Miss Nancy Flanders of Newham, and Mrs. Clifford A. Clark of Lincoln. Miss McCabe is a niece of Mrs. Charles B. Clark and has been a frequent visitor to Prince Edward Island.

Harlow's Spirit Hovers Again

BEVERLY HILLERS, Call (A.P.)—The spirit of the late Jean Harlow hovered over the district features, flowing gown and platinum-colored California designers unveiled Thursday in their spring and recent wear collections.

Two huge sleeves enveloped one model in Dominique's latest dress sweeping across the aisle in an over-size bathing effect. Mr. Blackwell will give one black-formfitting silk line evening gown a headless of black and white outer layers, which also hang down the back.

"I call this my horror dress," he told a fashion writer. "Doesn't the model look like a stunk from behind gown of the most typical evening gown of the national press week-end 12th of November." "It sells for $300, and I call it 'horror' because it's been sold," said Blackwell.

"It's over-priced at $200—but I think any woman who buys one deserves to get clipped." Blackwell's were the sexiest, boldest and the most ruffled, the bosom and hips, glittering with sequins and capel for evening wear. Dominique emphasized sleeves.

SLEEVES BLOWN

There were long, pantalon sleeves on one daytime dress. Another, in scarlet georgette billowed in a huge blouson with moon sleeves — elbow length with a slightly puffed look. A suit in lime cotton slacks had a Alne skirt and opened to a darker green shirred blouson of georgette.

Easier skirts turned up in the California line. Deep-pleated at the sides or with a walking pleat in the front, the skirts appeared on coats, suits and dresses.

They were done in large, tulle-like checks, frose canvas and easy-to-wear cotton and synthetic blends. Suit jackets were hip-belted, nerf-like style, and buttoned into blazers.

Mancini showed a fancy-checked tweed silk line card double-breasted with a stand-away collar over a short sleeve matching dress. His showpiece was an empire line coat falling into nice pleats over a bright green, short-sleeved Alne empire dress.
