SIG. CRISPI OF ITALY.

HOW THE NEW PRIME MINISTER PASSES HIS DAYS.

The Routine of a Statesman Who Works Very Hard—His Personal Habits and Characteristics—The Skeleton in the Italian Premier's Closet.

Sig. Crispi, the present Prime Minister of Italy, like all heads of Ministries, is an exceedingly busy man. He gets up about 7 o'clock every morning, and promptly at 8 he begins work with his secretaries. He remains with them until luncheon time—a meal which he eats rapidly, surrounded by his family. He is accustomed, however, to work while eating. To aid him in this two baskets are placed near him, one for letters and telegrams which do not need to be answered, and the other for those to which replies must be sent. The letters of the latter class he reads as rapidly as possible and outlines with a pencil the answers which are to be written out later by his clerks. He is a fast writer, and usually outlines at the luncheon hour enough work to occupy his secretaries for a good part of the afternoon.

Sig. Crispi is a small eater and is a better judge of wines than of the preparations of his kitchen chef. He cares little for meat, drinks temperately of wine but never liquors, and never smokes. His cook is an Italian, as he manifests a preference for Italian dishes.

After luncheon the Minister resumes his duties at his office and receives the numerous persons begging for an audience. In the early evening he takes a drive, usually accompanied by his daughter, a charming young woman of whom he is exceedingly fond. Since the unfortunate escapades of his son, which led to the young man's confinement in a reformatory, he lavishes all his affection on this daughter.

The chief meal of the day, dinner, is eaten at 7 o'clock. Afterward he usually receives a few of his most intimate friends. The hours with these companions are the pleasantest of the day for him. He is an excellent conversationalist, and loves to recall instances in early life, when he little dreamed that he would be the head Minister of a reconstructed Italy. Like Bismarck, he is a bad listener, and his guests prefer to allow him to direct the conversation to his humor.

At 10 o'clock the Minister returns to his office and remains there until midnight. He is in bed almost every night before 1 o'clock.

Petroleum Bricks for Fuel.

Bricks of solidified petroleum bid fair to become an important addition to our fuel supply, especially for export to countries and coaling stations remote from the world's coal measures. Coal briquettes are largely used in Germany and France, as they are to a much smaller extent in this country. But a method of making a much more efficient fuel of the same size and of less weight has recently been announced by Senor Maestracci of the Italian navy. It is a mixture of 1 part petroleum, 10 per cent. of resin, 6¼ ounces of powdered soap and 1 pound of caustic soda. This is heated and stirred, solidification beginning in about 10 minutes. If then there is a tendency not to harden, a little more caustic soda must be added. The thick paste is molded and then placed for 10 or 15 minutes in a drying stove, when, after cooling, the petroleum briquettes are ready for use in a few hours. Twenty per cent. of sawdust is recommended for making them both cheaper and more solid, though it must take somewhat from their heating value. Trials conducted on tugboats at Marseilles proved the efficiency of the petroleum briquettes to be about three times that of those of coal of the same weight. Used in the ordinary furnaces they required no special preparation, gave but little smoke and left but little ash. The absence of smoke and the large reduction in bulk compared to coal, combined with the decrease in risk compared to liquid fuels, especially fit these petroleum briquettes for marine use. They are likely to be very popular with owners of small crafts.

What Chemistry May Do.

It has been said that a century is the natural duration of the human body; that it decays earlier because it does not receive proper care in health and disease. In regard to this latter, here is a suggestion from a man who protests against so much research in electricity to the neglect of chemistry. He says there are 72 elements of matter capable of entering into an infinity of combinations, and concludes therefore "that a form of matter must be capable of existence, and must, therefore, be within the power of chemical research to discover and prepare which will possess an assignable or conceivable potency or influence over any form or species of matter, dead or living." If this be true, then it is possible to chemistry to find substances which will neutralize all the poisons generated by disease germs and kill disease the moment it is discovered.—Pittsburg Times.

Short Bits.

Dutch Names for the Months.

In Holland the following poetic names for the months are in use: January, Lauromaand, chilly month; February, Sprokelmaand, vegetation month; March, Lentmaand, spring month; April, Grassmaand, grass month; May, Blowmaand, flower month; June, Zomermaand, summer month; July, Hooymaand, hay month; August, Oostmaand, harvest month; September, Herstmaand, autumn month; October, Wynmaand, wine month; November, Slagmaad, that is slaughter month; December, Winnermaand, winter month.

An Egotistical Critic.

One of the most remarkable examples of mistaken criticisms is found in Bentley's edition of Milton. Whenever either sense or sound did not suit the critic, he never hesitated to amend according to his own notion, confidentially assuring the reader what Milton meant to say.

Professor Lombroso, the Italian scientist, concludes after investigation that women of the criminal and immoral type are invariably larger of hand and feet and smaller in the head than average women.

JAGUARS.

Their Great Size and Their Wonderful Strength.

We measured the jaguar—an old male—before taking off the skin; five feet and seven inches from nose to root of tail; the tail added would bring the total length to nearly eight feet. This was a good deal above the average, though I have seen skins quite six feet long, not including the tail. The body weighed, I suppose, not less than three hundred pounds. This was the variety or species called canguasu by the hunters of Matto Grosso; on the Amazons it is the uriarara, or dog-jaguar. All over South America three kinds of jaguars are distinguished; naturalists at present regard them as varieties, but I confess I am inclined to side with the hunters who laugh at the idea that these three are the same. The canguasu—the kind Bert had shot—is confined to the higher lands, never straying over the great swamps of the Amazons and Paraguay. The ground-color is pale tawny, almost white at times, and is irregularly covered with small black spots, which tend to run into stripes along the back. Besides having longer legs and tail, it is altogether a more slender animal than the onca pintada, called by the Amazonian Indians yonarete-pacora sororoca, or "jaguar of the wild plantain," because it frequents swampy places where that plant grows. This is the common jaguar of the great river-plains, though also seen occasionally on the highlands. It is a deep tawny coat, with large black spots so arranged that they form little circles or "roses" on the sides, but sometimes run into stripes on the back. The onca pintada often attacks alligators and turtles, and it lives largely on fish. There is a curious story about the jaguar's fishing, which many travelers have told, though most discredit it. I have heard it from reliable woodsmen, who say they have watched the whole performance; and, for myself, I can see nothing incredible in it. The jaguar, it is said, lies on a projecting log and strikes the water gently with its tail; certain fruit eating fish, as the pacu, come to the sound, imagining that a fruit has dropped into the water, and the jaguar scoops them out with his paw. That these fish follow sound I know, for I have often caught pacus with a palm nut bait, dropping it gently on the surface of the water two or three times; the fish, attracted by the noise, soon appear, and even leap after the fruit as trout leap to a fly. This is the common method of pacu-fishing on the Paraguay, and very good sport it is.

The onca pintadas swim well, as I can attest. I have seen one swimming across the river Cuyaba where it is a quarter of a mile broad. It is said that they cross even the Paraguay and Amazons.

The third variety of species is the black tiger, very rare to the Matto Grosso highlands, but common in the Amazonian and Orinoco forests. This the largest and fiercest of all. At first sight the skin appears quite black; but on closer inspection still darker spots, similar to those of the onca pintada, can be distinguished.

I may add here that the puma—our North American species—is also found all over South America, and in many places is very common. It is a pest to the cattlemen, from its propensity for carrying off young calves; but otherwise it is little feared, and for size and fierceness will bear no comparison with the jaguars. South America has also a number of smaller species, ranging from the spotted jaguatirica, nearly as large as a puma, down to the little gray and striped kinds hardly bigger than a domestic cat.—St. Nicholas.

A Dancing Bean.

A wonderful seed, a native of South America, is called the dancing bean. It is a small, fibrous seed of triangular form, and about the size of a pea. It is very light and easily crushed. It contains a small quantity of pulp; that in the case of one seed examined was dried up into a soft, white substance.

The seed will not move for some time after having been handled, but will begin moving again in a few minutes after having been left in repose upon a smooth surface.

As an experiment a dozen little seeds were placed on a small, smooth tray, when they seemed to be affected with St. Vitus' dance. Without any apparent reason they would shift around with spasmodic little jerks and twitches that were ludicrous to gaze upon.

For a while one would keep perfectly still, then the fit would assail it, and, beginning with scarcely perceptible oscillations, it would rouse itself into a regular spasm, rolling over from side to side and going through all sorts of strange movements, taking occasional rest from its exertions.

There are strange things in the vegetable as well as in the animal kingdom.

Notes on Authors.

Constance Fenimore Woolson is buried in the Protestant Cemetery in Rome, near Shelley's grave.

The present London edition of Thomas Hardy's "Tess" is said to have reached a scale of 23,000 copies.

From the sales of the foreign rights of each of their new books it is said that Daudet and Zola receive each about $6,000.

Poetry and turkey-raising may not seem to blend as happily as the literary world might wish, but, nevertheless, Samuel Minturn Peck, the best of Southern song writers, is making a fortune out of both.

F. Marion Crawford has nearly completed a new novel that is to be published by Macmillan & Co. late in the spring. It deals with American life, and there is a rumor that Mr. Crawford has introduced an American family whose fortunes he will follow in several novels as he did those of the "Saracinesca" in his Roman series.

The Only Way.

Potts—What?

Watts—Fact. I can make my wife take back everything she has said by giving her $10.

Byron's Child's Husband.

The Earl of Lovelace, who died recently at the advanced age of 88, was not only the husband of Byron's only child, but he was a direct descendant of Henry VII. and Lady Catherine Grey. He was an architect, a landscape gardener, and an engineer.

As Big As Little Children.

One day the teacher of an infant class asked this question: "How big do you think we must be in order to become a Christian? Must you be as big as I am?" The children all seemed to think so, except one little tot, who said: "Just as big as we are!"

The Age Of Whales.

The age of whales is ascertained by the size and number of lamine of the whalebone, which increases yearly. Ages of 300 and 400 years have been assigned to whales from these indications.

The Modern Invalid.

Consumption—Low Condition

Wonderful Results From Taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Miss Hannah Wyatt
Toronto, Ont.

"Four years ago while in the old country (England), my daughter Hannah was sent away from the hospital, in a very low condition with consumption of the lungs and bowels, and weak action of the heart. The trip across the water to this country seemed to make her feel better for a while. Then she began to get worse, and for 14 weeks she was unable to get off the bed. She grew worse for five months and lost the use of her limbs and lower part of body, and if she sat up in bed had to be propped up with pillows. Physicians

Said She Was Past All Help

and wanted me to send her to the 'Home for Incurables.' But I said as long as I could hold my hand up she should not go. We then began to give her Hood's Sarsaparilla. She is getting strong, walks around, is out doors every day; has no trouble with her throat and no cough, and her heart seems to be all right again. She has a first-class appetite. We regard her cure as nothing short of a miracle." W. WYATT, 89 Marion Street, Parkdale, Toronto, Ontario.
