Anxiety Discussed By Dr. Theriault

Continuing on with the series "You and your Personality" sponsored by the Y. M. C. A. So-Ed group, Dr. John C. Theriault of the Division of Mental Health, presented to the group a talk on "Anxiety and its Defences." Although he felt the magazines have popularized Psychiatry and made the public aware of its importance, nevertheless, this had many drawbacks especially in confusing the public as to a "frame or reference."

"If anxiety could be controlled by biological or social means fundamental alterations in the organization of our civilization would ensue and the probability of individual happiness would be greatly enhanced. Yet although it is widely recognized that anxiety is the most pervasive psychological phenomenon of our time and that it is the chief symptom in the neuroses and the functional psychoses there has been little or no agreement on its definition."

This quotation from a book on anxiety should prove the importance of, and the difficulty we have, understanding our terms.

Rather than a definition he described anxiety as a state of disequilibrium, with manifestations that we recognized as the "Symptoms of anxiety." Normally we strive for a state of equilibrium - Equilibrium between basic drives, external or environmental stress, and our defence mechanism. When this equilibrium was disturbed a state of disequilibrium followed - this state we called anxiety.

Cause of Confusion

It was also concerning the above mentioned forces or impulses that much confusion had stemmed. Many persons reading psychiatric literature became confused over the term instincts. In dynamic psychiatry the word instinct was not used to represent the inherited and unchangeable patterns imbedded in the organic structure of the animal.

Tracing briefly formation of personality, he showed how it was the function of certain parts of the personality to control, handle and censor these drives, impulses or tendencies which of times were not acceptable to our conscious selves. Certain mental mechanisms protected the personality, serving to satisfy emotional needs, establishing and maintaining harmony among conflicting tendencies, and to modify reality and to make reality acceptable to us.

Dr. Theriault then went on to explain many of these mechanisms. He said we all used many of them but certain ones carried to extremity rendered the personality unable to carry on. We substitute defences for intolerable inward tensions, How the personality handles and modifies these inward tensions, impulses etc., determined our behaviour. If we can properly understand our defences we can properly understand psychiatry.

Visitors' Day At Montague School

"Education Week was fittingly observed in Montague on Thursday, March 6th when a large number of parents and friends visited the school and were cordially welcomed by teachers and pupils. Several of the junior grades put on a special program for visitors day which was highly appreciated and praised by the large number who came to watch the new methods of education, and marvel at the great change which has taken place since they were sitting in seats somewhat similar to those in which their children were sitting.

In the evening a special meeting of the Montague Home and School Association was held, presided over by Dr. G. S. A. Inman. There were thirty-two parents and teachers present. The theme of the meeting was education and an appropriate address was given by Mr. Vernon MacLean, grade eleven teacher of Montague High School.

Mrs. E. H. Stewart, convener of the program committee, introduced the speaker and also presided during the presentation of a playette "Why Parent Education", which featured the attitudes of parents towards their children in the home. This was followed by a discussion led by Dr. Inman which proved very interesting as well as educational.

Taking part in the play were Mrs. Carl Boehner, Mrs. J. D. MacLeod, Mrs. Cecil Beck, Mrs. Elsie Waterworth, Miss Evelyn Underhay, Miss Shirley Jenkins, Mr. Bedford MacDonald, and Mr. Archie Hillehey.

At the close of the meeting two educational films were shown by Mr. Carl Boehner.
