ELLEN'S DIARY

Who Have This Happiness Can Really Sing For Joy

When after a spell of mild weather, the mercury in the outdoor thermometers dips a bit frostily, smiles wreath the faces of the children. Today in a nice anticipation of skating, Mack refitted his boots with new laces, and then retrieved a hockey stick and puck from a closet up under these eaves.

We smiled at his remark when he brought them down to the kitchen. "I believe when I grow up, I'll live in this house," he said. "I know it's old," he nodded, "but there's this about it—there's always room in it for everything. That's what I like about a house: plenty of room."

These times, he and Gage as well, keeps an eye to the fields, to note whether or not in some depression there, they may find a rink in the making.

So still the fall - fields lie... still and drab. No cloverly meadows white in the sunlight; no wind - stirred satiny hazy lands, nor pure gold of the harvest; no cattle lazing on the pastures, nor horses cantering down to the stream. Only the neutral tints are there and the cool, damp of the season.

"What became of that November bride and bride-groom?" a housewife questioned in her letter today. "And was it a pretty wedding?"

It was... and obviously happy. The young bride, very fair was radiant in her white gown and veil, her attendants also youthful, attractive in pastel shades of maize and blue.

The reception which followed the church wedding (with as it happened and unquely we think, both grandmothers of the bride-groom among the many loved ones and friends present) was a held at the old home of the bride's (paternal) people, a hospitable, happy place, which knew the voices of children and grandchildren in plenty down through the years.

The cake was cut traditionally, and we suspect that some of the sweet young recipients had a fragment of it put through, or at least touched by the bride's ring, to bear home with them, and tucked beneath their pillow to inspire pleasantly exciting dreams.

The bride's bouquet was caught by a starry-eyed village miss, before the pair with "just married" tokens on and about them, set off all smiles, into the night to a honeymoon to be spent on the Mainland and afar. By this they will have returned, and hearts high, embarked more seriously on the sea of married life.

To these and to the many who of late, and presently will have set their intriguing barques afloat, the Alderlea family would wish, "Happy Sailing!" And is not such happiness assured "ever after?" Because as an ancient writer has put it: "When the one man loves the one woman, and the one woman loves the one man, the very angels leave Heaven, and come to sit with them, and sing for joy!"

Until tomorrow—Diary—Good-night.

Let us be true to our traditions. Let us be faithful to the love we have for our families. Let us love and cherish our families. No garden is complete until it turns: Turn up for meetings. Turn up with a smile. Turn up with new ideas. Turn up with a generous spirit to give our best to everything we do. Turn up with a good and worthwhile purpose. Yes, it would seem as if a garden were not all the necessary vitamins for the love in the Beta Sigma Phi Garden of Life, Learning and Friendship.

PLAIN and FANCY DESSERTS

Creamy and rich-flavored... smooth and luxurious... that look special, taste special, are hard for any family to resist. That's why you'll want to know about the unusual quality that Carnation Evaporated Milk gives to even the simplest desserts. Carnation's double-richness makes such a wonderful difference in results. Take custard for instance. You'll believe how good custard can be, until you make it the Carnation way. Double-rich Carnation assures you that's never watery - always perfectly set, creamy, rich-tasting. And Carnation's special blending quality smoothness not possible with any other form of milk.

cream. But remember Carnation. No other milk will do.
CREAM TROPICANA (Makes 6 to 8 servings)
2 tablespoons flour
1/2 cup sugar
1/2 cup water
2 eggs, well beaten
Juice and grated rind of 1 orange
Juice and grated rind of 1 lemon
1 cup undiluted CARNATION EVAPORATED MILK
Sift flour and sugar into saucpan. Mix with eggs. Stir in sugar and juice. Stir constantly over low heat until thickened. Cook in Carnation in freezing tray until soft crystals form through mixture. Whip until stiff. Fold in cream. Chill until serving time.

"FAILURE-PROOF" CARNATION CUSTARD (Makes 6 to 8 individual custards)
4 eggs
1/2 cup granulated sugar
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon vanilla
1/2 cup water
1 large can undiluted CARNATION EVAPORATED MILK
Beat ingredients together to mix well. Pour into 6 to 8 individual baking dishes; sprinkle with nutmeg. Put dishes in pan 2 1/2 inches deep; pour hot water around custard dishes. Bake in moderate oven (350°F.) for 40 to 45 minutes, or until knife inserted in custard comes out clean. Remove from water and cool.
Delicious topping for custard: chocolate sauce, or frozen strawberries, or sliced fresh fruits.

FANCY ENOUGH FOR GUESTS—yet easy to prepare—that's what desserts are when you make them with Carnation, the double-rich milk that whips. Here's a perfect example of what I mean — Cream Tropicana. It's amazingly inexpensive, yet tastes as if you had made it with costly whipping cream. But remember Carnation. No other milk will do.
FREE! Carnation's "Push 'n' Pop" Can Opener. It pushes the lid off any can, even the most stubborn. Write "Can Opener," your name and address on a postcard, and mail to: Blake, Department 28, Carnation Co., Limited, Toronto.
