hesitant to do so. I realized that my sincerest interest still was Ernie. I broke the engagement. When Ernie learned I was free, he began dating me again, though on a somewhat-spasmodic basis. I am certain now that I love him, but still he maintains the same non-committal attitude towards me. That he likes me I know, and I feel his interest goes deeper than mere liking, but how can I draw him out?

HE PONDER'S TOO LONG

ANSWER: To be brutally frank, I don't think Ernie is thinking of marriage. Certainly there's no reason, if he does care for you, why he shouldn't tell you his intentions, rather than to a mutual friend. He likes feminine company; he particularly enjoys yours, but he also has a strong disinclination to being tied down. His tendency to call you just a day or two before he wants a date is proof enough of that. A man seriously in love wants to know where he stands with the object of his affection, and will have her pretty well lined up for steady dates, or he will at least make plans when he sees her. By the time a man is 30 he should have a draft of his future—so should a girl of 27. Building a family is a job for the young years, not middle-aged ones.

You can't let the situation stagger along in an uncertain fashion, or you may find yourself as a partner in one of these never-ending courtships. You must ascertain your beau's intentions. Also, you must be subtle about it. He may be reassured by a strong argument that marriage won't destroy his personality. Don't avoid the subject of marriage; bring it out into the open on an impersonal basis to find out his reactions.

DEAR MISS DIX: My wife and I are professional people, maintaining separate offices. Recently at a convention she met several persons in her particular line, and spent most of her time talking with them. I felt she was neglecting me. In fact, she even permitted some of the men to hug her in greeting.

Martin J.

ANSWER: Your wife's only guilt was in thoughtlessness. As for the greeting, she scarcely could be expected to anticipate that these gentlemen, in their exuberance, would be so demonstrative. I'm sure you have nothing to worry about, so put the incident out of your mind.

JOHN LUND STARS AT CAPITOL, SUMMERSIDE

From the pages of the Saturday Evening Post comes Michael Fessier's stirring drama with an equally dramatic and intriguing title, "Woman They Almost Lynched." A hard-fighting, romantic and suspenseful story with a western Civil War background, this Republic picture, now at the Capitol Theatre, has been given an impressive star cast in John Lund, Brian Donlevy, Audrey Totter and Joan Leslie.

"Woman They Almost Lynched" is a bang-up parcel of dynamic cinema fare which takes place in a border town at the height of the Civil War. The action revolves around a lead mine which supplies the Union Army with material for war. Although the mine supplies the bluecoats and is operated by a hard-bitten Amazon woman, Nina Varela, the border city adjacent to the mine is neutral and its citizens intend to keep it that way even if it means stringing up a man or woman by a rope from the nearest tree.

Director Allan Dwan has keyed this production to a high excitement pitch throughout with outstanding performances contributed by the stars and supporting cast which includes Jim Davis, Reed Hadley, Ann Savage, Virginia Christine, Marilyn Lindsey and a host of the screen's foremost players.

Mr. Gilbert Gallant of Summerside visited with his mother, Mrs. John A. Gallant of Woodstock.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph LeClair, Mr. and Mrs. Urban Pineau, Mr. Reg. Pineau and Mrs. Audrey Gallant were visitors in Miscouche guests of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Pineau.

Mrs. Sutherland Bell of Mill River, was hostess to the B. C. W. I. members and their partners on Nov. 25. The younger members of the Institute assisted Mrs. Bell in serving a delicious turkey supper with all the "fixins". After the supper things were cleared away and Mrs. Reginald MacAusland who was on the recreation program put on some amusing games which were enjoyed much by young and old. An auction sale was held and a goodly sum was realized, a vote of thanks was carried to Mr. and Mrs. Bell. Mrs. Bell thanked the
