Greenwich Quartet Thrills Audience With Program

By CHRISTOPHER GLEDHILL

(The following was written especially for the Guardian by the director of music for P.E.I.)

Last night's concert by the Greenwich Quartet was undoubtedly the best concert heard in Ch'town for a considerable period and the Community Concert Association are to be congratulated on securing such a talented combination.

The Mozart piano quartet tested the mettle of the players and they emerged triumphantly. Their sense of style was impeccable their ensemble a delight and an object-lesson in teamwork. Not once did they succumb to the temptation to be over-emphatic or to rush the tempi.

Guy Lumia gave us some fireworks by Sarasate on the violin. The double stopping, left-hand pizzicato, harmonies and dazzling bravura passages were all there.

This was followed by a cello solo by Weber, arranged pretty freely by Piatigorsky, of somewhat the same nature, rendered with some warmth of feeling, especially in the more reflective passages by David Everhart.

NOVEL TREAT

The audience was treated to something of a novelty by Myron Rosenbloom, the violist, who turned to the viola d'amore, an antique instrument that is seldom heard nowadays except in the Dolmetsch type of concert.

There was no mention of the arranger on the programme, but the arrangements was evidently made comparatively recenily in a virtuoso style that one does not usually associate with this type of instrument. The sympathetic vibrations of the free strings give it a unique and delicate tone comparable to the bouquet of some rare wine.

I noticed that Mr. Rosenbloom's interest in this instrument did not extend to using the authentic bow!

The Pantoum from Ravel's Trio was played neatly and dextrously, as it should, with undertones of passion.

MAGIC MISSING

Mr. Rogers played Chopin's Third Ballade with a clean efficiency which somehow missed a good deal of the magic. It must be said, however, that the piano was not in the best possible shape.

The evening closed with Dvorak's expressive and warm-hearted piano quartet. This was a delight from beginning to end. Beneath its obvious naivete' this music conceals a powerful and constructive imagination. The peasant fragments develop, cross and reenter, appearing in new forms and bearing new implications, until the whole movement is tied up almost as neatly as Haydn used to do it a hundred years beforehand.

Once again the Quartet played with an unerring sense of style, with broader tone and more ample expression.

We hope to hear this group again, in the Memorial Theatre. Might I suggest that they recruit another violinist, so that they can perform the corpus of string quartets together with such works as The Brahms Piano Quintet?

WOOD IMPORTS

Mexico in 1962 imported $38,000,000 worth of industrial wood products, mostly pulp and newsprint, and exported less than $19,000,000.

Damage Suit Is Dismissed

The case of John N. Kenny Charlottetown, suing Camac claiming damages in the amount of $557.38 for damage allegedly done by Camac or an employee of Camac in the operation of a bulldozer, causing damage to his barn was dismissed by Mr. Justice George J. Tweedy in Supreme Court Tuesday.

Justice Tweedy found that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the operator and that Mr. Kenny had completely supervised the operations and that there was no agreement between Mr. Kenny and Camac Construction Co. Ltd. to do the work which was done without the knowledge of any of the officials of the construction company.

John P. Nicholson was council for the plaintiff and Allison Gillis acted for the defendant.

Committees Give Reports

CARDIGAN — A meeting of the Cardigan Village Centennial Committee was held in the school on Monday with Noel Wilson, overall chairman of the committees, in the chair. The secretary was village clerk Earl C. Macdonald.

The chairman for "Community Activities", Francis Shepherd reported that two of the four dances scheduled for April had to be cancelled due to weather conditions, but that the next one would take place in the Parish Hall on Friday, April 24. Plans were made by this committee to hold open air dances during the summer months.

John S. MacDonald reported that the schools had been notified about the "Design Contest", and that entries were to be submitted to the judges by May 15.

Further information on the mammoth barbecue plans was discussed, but no final decision on this could be made at present.

Definite offers of floats were made by the Legion, the Village, and a group of citizens headed by Walter Conohan. It is hoped that some of the neighboring districts will also have floats ready to take part in the parade.

The next committee meeting will be held in the School on Monday, May 4.

Post Office Contract Let

CARDIGAN — The contract for the new Post Office at Cardigan has been let to MacPherson Construction Company and engineers were on the site Wednesday to do the survey work.

The location is south of the river and north of the railroad track. The lot was formerly owned by Mrs Gertrude MacInnis. It is located between the residence of Peter Nabours and Brothers garage.

The building will be 24 feet by 24 feet, and there is expected to be additional space for an agricultural office.

The post office at present is located in R.J. MacDonald's store
