MORE THAN 100 JAPS STILL HELD

Only Four War Crimes Nazis Remain Behind Bars

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Behind the walls of Berlins' Spandau prison and the smoke-stained enclosure of Sugamo, on Tokyos outskirts, lives the' ragged remnant of the Axis coalition that was to rule the world for a thousand years.

If you could look beyond Spandaus turreted towers you might begin to understand the words, spoken by a Western official:

"Sometimes its bettter to think 'of them as dead.'

He was speaking of the men held inside Spandau, the war crimes prison where 10 years ag the Allies caged the seven surviving leaders of Hitler's Germany.

FOUR REMAIN

Only four remain, two of them under psychiatric treatment. They are:

Rudolf Hess, , Hitler's deputy and "shadow." Convicted at Nuernberg of "plotting against peace." Sentence: life.

Today Hess lives in a morose dream world apart from his fellow prisoners. Doctors say he is subject to fits of insanity.

Walter Funk, , Nazi economics minister whose banks stored the gold teeth and fillings taken from Jews gassed in concentration camps. Convicted of "crimes against humanity." Sentence: life.

Funk today suffers from a serious prostate condition, other diseases and a nervous breakdown.

AWAITS RELEASE

Albert Speer, , Nazi production genius who sustained Hitler's munitions output under Allied bombing. Convicted of "crimes against humanity," Sentence: 20 years.

Speer is in the best condition of all, eagerly awaiting his release and doing research in town and city planning.

Baldur von Schirach, 48, azi youth leader and gauleiter of Austria. Convicted of "crimes against humanity." Sentence: 20 yers.

Von Schirach is in fairly good physical condition, although subject to moods of extreme depression.

100 STILL HELD

In Japan slightly more than 100. men remain in drab Sugamo prison, the remains of an army of more than 4,000 Japanese convicted of war crimes by the Allied powers.

Since VJ, 3,280 Japanese war criminals have been freed or paroled and 90 executed by the Allies. Their offences ranged from brutality toward Allied prisoners of-war to "crimes against humanity."

A survey shows that since 1950 the United States, Britain and France have released or paroled 118 lesser war criminals are interned in smaller U.S., British and French prisons in West Germany.

Russia claims to have released all German prisoners, including war criminals, but the West German government says thousands still are held.

Of the handful of Japanese prisoners left in Sugamo, none are former war leaders. They are ex-rank and-file members of Imperial Japanese forces under sentence of years to life. Only 10 are former generals.

MANY PAROLED

Of the major leaders who dragged Japan into war, 16 have been paroled short of their full terms of Sugamo. Two died of illness and seven were hanged.

Life for those still serving sentences in Sugamo is not very different from that of the ex-Nazis in Spandau. What goes on behind the walls is mostly secret. In the case of Spandau, the men inside exist almost forgotten in a "twilight" fortress where almost no information is allowed to leak out.

At Spandau, what information does get out indicates that the Western powers are engaged in an unending struggle with the Russians to ease the harsh prison routine imposed on the aging Nazis.

ACCUSED OF CODDLING

Soviet prison officials accuse the Western allies of trying to coddle men guilty of unleashing the Second World War.

We don't pity these Nazis who helped slaughter millions," counters one Western official privately. We just want to be a little more humane to keep up with the times."

Control of the prison rotates month to month between the Americans, British, French and Russians. It costs about $100,000 a year to run the prison and the city of West Berlin puts up about three quarters of the cost.

The prisoners live in separate cells, furnished with steel cots, wooden tables, stools and wardrobes. They wash their own rough prison garb.

They get up at 6 a.m. After breakfast they go out to work in the prison yard, mostly at a vegetable garden. Only Hess refuses to work.

READING CENSORED

The afternoon also is spent in small jobs and dinner comes at 5 p.m. From then until 10 the prisoners may smoke—pipes only, with one small tin of tobacco a week. The prisoners are permitted to read censored books and selected German newspapers.

At Sugamo, prisoners get up at 6.30 a.m., breakfast frugally and start work at 8. Some work under the prison cooks, others at clean-up or odd jobs and a few do printing, laundry and carpentry.

At night, they play chess, mahjong and watch recreational movies. Several prisoners share each drafty cell,furnished mostly with article brought by relatives.

GERMAN AIRMEN STUDY JET TRAINING IN CANADA

Plan To Operate Plows All Night On Roads Near S'side

Reports from the government garage in Summerside last night indicated that snow plows were working steadily east and west of Summerside and would continue to do so all night in an endeavor to keep the main highway open.

The main points where difficulties were being encountered were at Travellers Rest east of Summerside and at the Curran and Briggs district west of the town, also in the Wellington district. Plows were also working the Borden to Summerside highway and a number of cars were reported to be snowbound at Freetown and Bedeque.

It was reported that heavy drifts filled in the cuttings almost as quickly as they were plowed out but officials at the garage expressed the hope that the main highways would be kept open unless the predicted storm made it impossible to continue operations throughout the night.

Alberton reported there was no snow falling in the West Prince area but that a heavy ground drift was filling in highways rapidly Plows were not working during the night.

Conway Closing Is A Very Pretty Scene

In attractive festive dress of trailing spruce wreaths and streamers glistening with ornaments and an artistically arranged stage with the traditional tree in the background, Conway School on Thursday evening, Dec. 21st, was the scene of a Christmas concert staged by the pupils under the direction of their teacher, Mrs. Laughlin J. Kilbride. Parents and friends enjoyed a programme in keeping with the season and interspersed with humorous dialogue.

Mr. Clinton Morrison, chairman, congratulated the children on the fine quality of their concert and thanked Mrs. Kilbride for her direction which was very evident in the splendid manner in which each participant assisteed in presenting the programme.

SUM-HI-NOTES

Everything seems to be pretty much back to normal at Summerside High School now. The holidays came to an end on January 3rd, and both teachers and students returned to school for another term. The examinations written just before the holidays have all been corrected and returned to the students. The reports for grades 8-12 should be out by next week and it is hoped that all the marks made were each students best. If not, those students will have to work really hard for the next few weeks and bring their marks up in the Easter exams.

On Tuesday classes were cancelled in both the High School and Elementary School because of the storm occurring on that day. Announcements concerning the decision of whether classes would be held or not were made over CJRW. In all future times of doubt whether there will be school or not, the parents are asked to listen to the radio for news on that subject.

On Thursday morning the first assembly program of 1957 was held in the Civic Auditorium. Students of grades 7-12 as well as a radio audience listened to the broadcast.

Mr. Mercer opened the program by praising the conduct of students in their care of the new school and auditorium. He said that it was a pleasure for the staff to work in the modern building and he hoped that it was a pleasure also for the students to study in their new surroundings.

Mr. Mercer introduced Carol Mac Lean and the Rev. Webber, pastor of Summerside Trinity United Church. Carol, accompanied by Mr. Chaisson on the piano sang the beautiful New Year piece Green Sleeves.

Mr. Webber, originally from Dart mouth, Nova Scotia began his talk by telling a few interesting and humourous stories. He expressed his thanks for the friendliness of the adults and young people of the town towards him. He said he thought our youth were making a great contribution towards citizenship in this town, Mr. Webber stated every generation has a wonderful opportunity of delving into the future.

"You are fortunate to be living in this time" he said "and should pay the price of study. Another generation had to leave their books to fight for their country. There are storehouses of knowledge in science and other studies. God has blessed us all with brains and talent. We should use them to the best advantage and let our aim be high."

Mr. Webber concluded by repeating the verse, "Low aim, not failure is a crime. We have a vision in our minds and should of what we can be and become." Mr. Merer thanked Mr. Webster and Carol MacLean and announced that the guest speaker for next week would be the Chief Forecasting Engineer of R.C.A.F. Station, Mr. L. Miller.

Girls curling seems to be quite popular with the members of Summerside High School these days. The girls curl with members of the Curling Club instructing them at the curling Rink every Saturday morning at 10:00 o'clock. Any girls 10, 11, 12 of Summerside High School interested in learning to joining a team may do so by going to the rink on Saturday morning.

The boys of the classes from grades 10-12 have formed a basketball schedule for playing games. At this there have been only three games played and no one team is really on top yet.

Hundreds Are Left Homeless In Alaskan Fire

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP) — A mid-morning fire in this inland Alaska city's largest apartment building forced several hundred persons to flee in 15 below zero weather Sunday. At least one person is dead.

Nearly 300 tenants in the nine-storey, modern building were trapped for a time as the fire, one of the largest in Alaska's history, sent dense smoke swirling throughout the structure. Some trapped occupants jumped into nets. Others made their way to the ground on lowered bedsheets and blankets tied together. Still others were carried down ladders.

Firemen carried out nine persons either unconscious or in serious condition. The dead man was identified as William Stebbins, owner of the Riverside Bar and a prominent west coast restaurant man.

Jack Ryan, editor of the Fairbanks News - Miner, reported at 2:30 p.m. Alaska time (8:30 p.m. AST), that the fire was under control.

There were 700 persons occupying the 220 apartments in the big structure in the centre of Fairbanks, the nearest large town to the Arctic Circle. About half the number were standing at windows when firemen arrived. Some were calm, some nearly hysterical.
