

TEST THE KIDNEYS

And if they are diseased use the world's greatest kidney cure

Dr. A. W. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

It's a simple matter to test the kidneys. You need not consult a doctor. By asking yourself three questions you can determine whether or not your kidneys are deranged.

First: "Have you backache, or weak, lame back?"

Second: "Do you have difficulty in urinating or a too frequent desire to urinate?"

Third: "Are there deposits like brick dust in the urine after it has stood for twenty-four hours?"

In its earlier stages kidney disease is readily cured by a few boxes of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, a preparation which has made Dr. Chase famous throughout the world for his wonderful cures of diseases of the kidneys.

If you have kidney disease you can take Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills with perfect confidence that what has proved an absolute cure in so many thousands of cases will not fail you.

So long as the cells of the kidneys are not completely wasted away, as in the last stages of Bright's disease, Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills will give them new vigor and strength and make them strong, healthy and active. One pill a dose, 25c. a box, at all dealers, or Edmondson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

"Yes, of course. Why, how simple!" "You were saying a moment ago that you didn't see how I unravel mysteries. I brought the problem of the streets to your notice as an illustration. Such abilities as I have in that line—I don't claim that I have extraordinary ones—lie in exactly this direction—the power to see things plain enough to any eye, and also the power to see the meaning of things that are plain enough, or should be, to any mind. Summed up, it is the power of observation and the power of deduction; that is all.

"Many people look right at things which they never see, and others who see the things fail to note their meaning. Yet it is not because it is difficult or because it requires a mind and eye especially adapted to that sort of thing; not at all. It is simply that the mind and eye are indifferent—have grown callous to things. Children see many things that we old fellows miss, and they often detect the meaning of things when older persons fail to, which is another way of saying that their eyes and minds are not indifferent to the things around them. They are not yet old enough to have become callous to things."

"I see your meaning," said the girl.

"But 'the power of observation and deduction,' as you call it, doesn't seem nearly so easy to me as it seems to you. I think it must be a special gift, after all, just as some men are gifted with wonderfully keen eyesight."

"Yes—Barnard, for instance," said the professor. "Well, perhaps; you may be right."

When they reached home, it was time for tea, and they entered the dining room together. As the professor sat down he remarked, "I see your mother was not here to dinner."

"No," said the girl. And then after a moment she looked at him in some wonder and said: "But, Professor Gilman, tell me how you know. When you saw her this morning, she didn't know she was to be away. A friend that she met at church invited her to dinner, and she accepted. You were not here to dinner and have not seen my one since you returned who could tell you. How did you know?"

Professor Gilman smiled. "Observation and deduction," he said. "It appears that on Sundays we are provided with fresh napkins—at least I perceive that a fresh one is here at my place. I also see a fresh one at your mother's place, with her napkin ring beside it. But yours, I noticed, was rolled up and in your napkin ring, and likewise those of the other boarders, which argues that they have been used. If your mother had been here to dinner, hers would have been rolled up in her ring the same as the others; but, not being, I conclude that she was not here."

"I begin to see," said Josephine, "how you unravel mysteries. You seem to see always all there is to see."

CHAPTER II

At the breakfast table the following Friday morning the medical students were discussing a disappearance.

"I can't imagine what has become of Damon," said Ben Rice. "His friends haven't seen or heard anything of him since Wednesday night. It looks to me like foul play. Damon was a man of steady habits and the last fellow you would expect to drop out of sight this way. I don't believe he has done it intentionally."

Professor Gilman was eating breakfast over at his table. He happened to be alone at the table, and the students spoke loud enough for him to hear what was said.

Just then Mrs. Maxwell and her daughter came in to breakfast, and Rice, after saying good morning to them, asked, "Miss Maxwell, did you hear about Luther Damon's mysterious disappearance?"

The girl turned quickly and faced Rice. "No," she said. "Tell me about it."

"Why, he hasn't been seen at college nor at his boarding house since last Wednesday night. He boarded just around the corner, at 826 Wallace street, you know. The servant there says that about 9 o'clock Wednesday night a man called at the door and asked for Mr. Damon. She says he stood in the shadow while he was talking and that he can't describe his appearance. She wouldn't know him if she saw him again. She called Mr. Damon, who was up in his room, the man waiting for him outside meanwhile. Damon put on his hat and went out, and that is the last that any one has seen of him. The police have been notified and are searching for him, but have found no trace of him so far."

Rice, who had finished his breakfast, now came over and sat down in one of the vacant chairs at the other table.

"What gives an ugly look to the business," he continued, "is the fact that the day before Damon disappeared he quarreled with a student named Nutt, who boarded at the same place and whose room was next to Damon's. Just what the quarrel was about isn't clear, but high words between them were overheard by Nutt's roommate, who was in the next room. He says he heard one of them say: 'Take care! Don't go too far or you'll be sorry for it!' But he can't tell which one it was."

"The next night Nutt left the house directly after dinner and didn't return till 12 o'clock. One of the other boarders who came home about the same time saw him and thought he looked as if he had been drinking. The servant who saw the unknown man about 9 o'clock is quite sure it was not Nutt, whose face and voice she is perfectly familiar with, though she denies that she should know the man if she saw him again. The police have no idea the man was Nutt, but what they want to find out now is who was the man. They believe Nutt knows, and that he and the unknown man can tell what became of Damon."

"Nutt is popular among the students, and we don't any of us like to think he has done anything criminal, but circumstances make it look rather black for him."

Josephine Maxwell had listened intently, and when Rice paused she said, "Why, isn't it awful! Luther Damon was such a nice young man too."

"Yes," said Rice. "He was a very bright fellow. Of course we all hope he will turn up again safe, but there is apparently no reason for his absenting himself from college, and altogether it is very puzzling."

Professor Gilman had listened to all that Rice said, and now he asked, "Where does this Mr Nutt claim to have spent Wednesday evening—the time that he was absent from his boarding place?"

He says that when he left the house after dinner he went to the Lincoln hotel, where a friend of his was staying, and spent the whole evening with him in room 43. This friend, a man named Mason, was in the city for only a short time, and he left for Mexico the following morning. He told Nutt the name of the place he was going to, but Nutt says it was some difficult Mexican name, and he can't remember what it was. That makes it impossible to communicate with him.

"The hotel register shows that a man named Matthew Mason, who registered from New York, occupied room 43 that night, and that Thursday morning he was taken in one of the hotel carriages to the station of a railroad that has connection with a road running to Mexico. Nothing further is known of this man Mason at the Lincoln hotel. He had never been there before, so far as the hotel people know. The clerk describes him as a young man with smooth face, blue eyes and brown, curly hair, of medium height, and says he wore a brown check suit and brown derby hat. No one at the hotel remembers seeing Nutt there that night, but Nutt explains that he knew the location of No. 43 and went right up to the room without speaking to any one.

It is Highly Palatable...

Don't be under the impression that Abbey's Effervescent Salt is unpalatable. It is a most delicious preparation to the taste—so pleasant, in fact, that it is oftentimes taken as a beverage. It is an unequalled thirst-quencher. But aside from these excellent qualities, it is the most wonderful regulator of health known.

Abbey's Effervescent Salt

taken daily, will purify your blood and cleanse your system. Its effect is mild—almost imperceptible—but certain. Take it every day and you will enjoy constant good health. Abbey's Effervescent Salt, which is prescribed and endorsed by physicians, is a standard English preparation which all druggists sell at 60 cents a large bottle. Trial size, 25 cents.

is insidious, and men do not realize that they are in its clutch. While consumption is a germ disease, the bacilli will not invade sound and healthy lungs. The lungs must first be in a diseased condition.

First a man feels a little out of sorts. Probably he is overworked and has given too little time to eating, sleeping and resting. His appetite falls off. His digestion gets out of order and his blood does not receive the proper amount of life-giving nutriment. The liver becomes torpid and the blood is filled with impurities. These are pumped into every organ of the body, building up unhealthy, half-dead tissues. The most harm is done at the weakest spot, and most frequently that spot is in the lungs. A slight cold leads to inflammation, the bacilli invade the lungs and we have a case of consumption.

Ninety-eight per cent. of all cases of consumption are cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is the great blood-maker and flesh-builder. It restores the lost appetite, makes the digestion perfect, invigorates the liver, purifies the blood, builds new and healthy flesh and drives out all impurities and disease germs. It cures weak lungs, spitting of blood, obstinate coughs and kindred ailments. No honest druggist will recommend a substitute.

Mrs. Ursula Dunham, of Sistersville, Tyler Co., W. Va., writes: "I had a pain in my side all the time, had but little appetite and grew very thin. The Golden Medical Discovery promptly cured the pain, restored my appetite and increased my weight."
