

MR. AND MRS. PHILIP MERKEL Summertime Wedding Held In Dartmouth, Nova Scotia

A summer wedding took place at the Lutheran Church, Dartmouth, N. S. when Hazel Irene Stewart, daughter of Mrs. Ira Stewart and the late Mr. Stewart of New Perth, P. E. I. was united in marriage to Philip William Merkel, son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Newman Merkel of Yonkers, N. Y. Pastor R. E. Rock officiated at the double ring ceremony. The organist was Mrs. R. E. Rock.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother-in-law, Ralph Stewart of Halifax, wore a floor length gown of ivory tulle de soie fashioned on Empire lines. Her bouquet was a cascade of yellow roses.

The attendants: Gail Stewart, the bride's niece, as maid of honor in lime green with narrow yellow sash and carrying a bouquet of yellow mums; and the bridesmaids, Anna Lisa Koskinen and Joyce Worthen, in yellow with orange sashes, wore gowns identical in style with matching flower headresses. The bridesmaids' bouquets were of orange mums.

The bride's little niece, Leanne Mackay, was flower girl in a lime green and yellow floor length gown, and carrying a basket of yellow baby mums.

Hubert Sherren of Dartmouth was best man, and James Isaac Halifax, ushered.

Mrs. Stewart, mother of the bride, wore a turquoise gown with matching lace coat, and a corsage of pink roses. The groom's mother wore a medium blue silk dress and a corsage of yellow carnations.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the Brass Rail banquet room in Halifax. The toast to the bride was proposed by Dr. Grinner, minister of the Halifax Church of Christ. Debbie Stewart, the bride's niece was in charge of the guest book.

On a honeymoon trip in the Maritimes and Quebec, the bride wore a pink suit with matching hat and white accessories.

The groom received his BA degree from New York University Washington Square College of Arts and Sciences in 1965. A master's degree candidate at NYU Graduate School of Education, he is attached to the Melrose Welfare Centre in the Bronx.

Mr. and Mrs. Merkel are residing in Yonkers, N. Y.

MARY HAWORTH

Wife's Cutting Humour Embitters Her Husband

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Your forthright answer to the woman who thinks family quarrelling among adults is better than repressed hostility cloaked in courtesy (which she equates with hypocrisy) scored a bull's eye, as applied to my marriage.

Especially your statement that life doesn't owe a so-called hapless victims, and that it's hostilities are his problem. My wife is just such a so-called, shooting poison darts in guise of "kidding" (her expression).

Her public image, however, is one of effervescent gaiety, especially if a male is in sight. Then little cutie-pie becomes Debbie Reynolds and Doris Day rolled into one 110-pound bleached blond package.

She fancies herself a comedienne. Her brand of "wit" is mimicking other persons' ungrammatical or unhip verbal slips. For example, mocking someone's report about going to the "MEW-seum" (accent for laughs on the first syllable) to see the "pitchers" (pictures).

The above happened in 1940, as she became newly acquainted with my brother's mountain-ear background wife, the butt of the joke. They've never dined with us since and, my parents backed them up. Though friendly by mail, they never stay overnight with us during motor trips and our children are strangers to theirs.

Cutie-pie thinks she's a woman and that it is females who undermine her. But neither our married son nor our son-in-law has any use for her. The former has said he will throw her out of the house if she ever pulls any "kidding" on his wife. She broke up his first big romance with her mimicry.

Our youngest, a boy, is just 10. Cutie-pie calls him "our drunk on afterthought." I'll never leave him to her custody to be brain washed; and no judge would ever believe that she is an unfit mother. So I'm stuck for another 12 years.

Meanwhile, I'm home as little as possible, keeping occupied elsewhere with transient affairs, though Cutie-pie, who bores the living daylight out of me, thinks she is Cleopatra and pities wives who haven't "got what it takes to hold a man" -- her phrase, not mine.

I wish I had been reading your column in 1940. I would have cleared out before we had children and before I was earning a hefty income that she'd claim most of it, if I bolted now. For her pint size, she's tenacious. Sincerely, E. P.

DEAR E. P.: The grinding undertone of your letter is hate, which he speaks bottled-up rage of the sort that feels helpless, pinned down, thwarted, outwitted, checked at every turn that hints of "exit".

I would surmise however, that the checkmating is rooted mostly in your own personality; in short, that you have "stuck" with this malevolent union because it somehow suits your neurotically malformed emotional constitution to do so.

The door to freedom from in-gominous bondage to the wife you despise yet cling to, in a reciprocity-type parasitical entanglement, can be found only through self-understanding and self-achievement.

One tends to admire your professed loyalty to your young son's welfare, which alone keep you harassed to your marriage you say.

But then one realizes that this is a false claim to paternal care, as one reads your further testimony that you are "home as little as possible, keeping occupied elsewhere with transient affairs" etc., while Cutie-pie fancies you're the moth to her flame.

If it were indeed true that the boy's welfare is your central concern in marriage, and that your fixed purpose is to stand between him and his mother's possessiveness, you'd be home as much as possible. You wouldn't be out debauching, certainly.

My advice is, look to yourself not your wife for the contaminating source of your rising sickness of soul. Get first-rate psychoanalytic help in healing yourself, preliminary to reacting sanely to your sick marriage. M. H.

ELLEN'S DIARY

The Vines And Pumpkins Are Touched With Frost

And now in a new week came the welcome rain. So heavily it fell, spilling to the roof, tumbling away from the eaves' spouts running in a brooklet here against our hillside, down the lane to join the stream and river below.

"No harvesting today," James commented at breakfast.

"No carpentry," we said.

However, on farms, the farmer does not cease work because of a rainfall. Other interests than fieldwork are fitted into the hours. The choring too continues. Cows were called in from pasture and "grained", stabled calves fed. In the quiet of the indoors, we were aware of the beat of the pump, and that sound of drawing water from the pipes, which indicates that feeding is in progress in the piggeries. And invariably there are tidings to be done in the buildings, the liquidating of those chores, put by in busier days and fine weather, for just such a day as was this one.

A frost we had on Saturday night here "Down by the old millstream". It came up from the low of the valley to the garden to sing the creeping plants, the pumpkins and cucumbers and suchlike.

"Now after that frost we're apt to get rain" an old-timer of visiting farmer offered yesterday. "I shouldn't by rights be saying, or even thinking of this today," he said soberly "but you will see there will be no harvesting tomorrow."

Recent visitors to Alderlea, from a distance, town folks walked in the fields and found them and the stream "very lovely." Some come by to enjoy the farm-sights: the cows and the calves together in the
