East meets West when W. Brennan of Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island meets with W.P. Davidson of Lethbridge, Alberta in the Prince Edward Island Room of the vice-president of traffic with the Canadian National Railways. His retirement, announced Thursday, is effective at the end of the year.

"This is the age of change, the day of young people," he said in an interview. "I think it's up to the young fellows now."

He sat in the office he soon abandons, glancing around walls lined with frame photographs of people. He is tall—six-foot—and lean with a distinguished but down-to-earth appearance.

His bushy black eyebrows go up and down as he talks.

"It's all scientific now," he said. "We've revolutionized the railway—diesel engines instead of steam locomotives, air-conditioning, central traffic control, traffic research."

The biggest change, he said, has been in people.

"The old-timers were hard-bitten, hard-boiled men. They were the old kind of pioneers. But today young people are born into a different kind of world. They're a new kind of pioneer, their frontier is science."

Mr. Metcalf, who will be 64 next December, was born in Toronto Junction, a railway switching point on the outskirts of Toronto.

Married, with three grown-up children. Mr. Metcalf plans to keep active after his retirement.

A director of the Chartered Trust Company, he will open an office in downtown Montreal to keep pace with his other duties. He is also active in community and welfare work.
