Explosive Possibilities in South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa, March 22—(CP)—Prime Minister Daniel Malan's race-segregation policies face a major court decision and threatened mass demonstrations in the coming month. In this country where 2,500,000 whites dwell alongside 10,000,000 non-whites denied full property and political rights, the situation has explosive possibilities. The country's highest court is due shortly to rule on the legality of a parliament act which would reduce the voting rights of 1,000,000 colored. This group stem mostly from marriages between whites and blacks and are virtually the only non-whites who, up to now, have had the franchise in South Africa. Observers predict a judgment against the government will touch off a major constitutional crisis. There is speculation Malan may try to settle it by calling a general election. A judgment for the government will add fuel to the fires of resentment already smoldering among the non-whites who have announced country-wide demonstrations April 6 to defy the race laws. That day marks the 300th anniversary of white settlement in South Africa, to be celebrated in government-sponsored programs.

Stresses Economic Progress Of Canada

MONTREAL, March 24—Canada in the past 12 years increased the real volume of her over-all annual production by 90 per cent. She expanded her working force by 30 per cent, doubling the proportion of industrial to farm workers. She developed one of the world's strongest currencies. And "in the most striking feature of the growth pattern," she invested her new capital in new industries, processes and resources. This sums up the main positive points made by the Bank of Montreal's Business Review, devoted this month to discussion of a special supplement, a 12-year table of Canada's economic trends. On the negative side the report emphasizes that one basic resource, population, remains in short supply; that the country depends heavily on a few leading exports to increasingly concentrated markets; and that danger of further inflation continues. Noting at the outset that Canada's economic future has lately occasioned "profuse comment," much of it radiating unrestrained optimism, the B of M proposes "an attempt at a balanced appraisal of Canada's position and prospects as seen from the inside."

The market value of Canadian output in 1951 at $21,217 millions, was nearly four times as large as in 1939, the bank points out but much of this reflected a doubling of the price level. Yet, after eliminating the price factor, the volume of the nation's annual product has grown by 90 per cent during the 12-year period. Most of this real gain represents a greater output per employed person since the working force was only 30 per cent larger in 1951 than in 1939. "Indeed, the relatively moderate rise of the working force serves to emphasize the fact that in one of its basic resources—population—Canada is far from adequately supplied."

Commenting upon Canada's discovery and development of important new resources, the review points out that this attracted enough foreign capital to finance a deficit in external trade and build exchange reserves. In consequence, the Canadian dollar was set free to find its own level last September, and "it is now one of the strongest of currencies." However, "the country's dependence on export markets has changed little with the passing years." The bank states, "Furthermore, the over-riding importance of a few main commodities continues." To this concentration in export lines must be added an increased concentration of markets. The United States received 50 per cent of Canada's exports in 1951, while the United Kingdom's share was only 16 per cent, a sharp fall from the 40 per cent it took in pre-war days. In all, however, even the most cautious appraisal of Canadian prospects must give weight to the dynamic forces of expansion, the bank emphasizes. Industrial development plans project a three-fold increase in the production of crude petroleum and fivefold in iron ore, before 1965 with large gains forecast for other metals.

Now, more than ever before, investors must find the RIGHT answers to these, and other, all-important questions:— What effect are the present world-changing conditions and the "explosive" international situation going to have on the securities of this particular company or that particular company? Should they be bought, held or sold? Has the stock market gone too high? I have been advised to buy "such-and-such" a stock. Should I do so? I have a profit, (or loss), on this particular stock. Should I sell or hold? But why go on? Probably, you have been faced with all these and many other similar investment problems, and have wished, so desperately, that there was someone you could turn to — someone on whom you could safely rely for sound, honest and expert advice — advice that, above all, would be ABSOLUTELY UNBIASED.
