A COUNTRY GARDEN

A COUNTRY GARDEN LATE AUTUMN
Now while a haze veils Autumn's russet hills, Though trees grown bare stand valiantly and tall Beneath the rapid onslaught of the rain, The little things are bravest in the Fall. Like dreams that last beyond the years of youth, They glow gently near us as we pass: The blood-red polished berries in a hedge, Or late gold flowers, like sunlight on the grass.

The polished berries in the hedge here are those of the Sweet Briar and on graceful branches with the evergreen hedge as a background, they are a pretty sight these autumn days. There is also a huge bush in the lower garden and it is covered with rose haws in orange scarlet. If there were not any lovely fragrant roses in July it would be worth growing for the autumn color. The Barberries have never been so covered with scarlet berries and the foliage is a beautiful crimson red. A part of the garden can be made into a satisfying autumn garden by planting evergreens and barberries for shrubs and also shrub roses with many different shaped haws as the lawns are still green and will continue that way for some weeks.

English Ivies should be included in this autumn garden as tubs planted with this ivy will stand much frost. Indeed, one ivy has background, they are a pretty sight these autumn days. There is also a huge bush in the lower garden and it is covered with rose haws in orange scarlet. If there were not any lovely fragrant roses in July it would be worth growing for the autumn color. The Barberries have never been so covered with scarlet berries and the foliage is a beautiful crimson red. A part of the garden can be made into a satisfying autumn garden by planting evergreens and barberries for shrubs and also shrub roses with many different shaped haws as the lawns are still green and will continue that way for some weeks.
