Two hundred and fifty seven years ago today the Dutch Admiral, Van Tromp, with a fleet of 80 vessels, surprised Admiral Blake with 40 British ships in the Downs, off Dover Strait. The Dutch defeated the English and captured or destroyed six of the English vessels. Thereupon the Dutchman triumphantly sailed up the English Channel with a broom at the masthead to denote that he had swept the English from the seas. Of course the great majority of schoolchildren in this city know of the succeeding events, but if there are any who do not, they will find an exceedingly interesting sequel to the Dutchman's temporary conquest.

A writer from Ottawa to the St John Telegraph says: "The Prince Edward Island Liberal members lose no opportunity of getting the subject of 'better communication' before the house. 'Judge' Warburton—the old title of 'Judge' still clings to him though he is now an M. P.—made a forcible presentation of the case again this week in asking for the papers in possession of the department upon the subject. The Finance Minister's reply was not in any sense discouraging, and yet, of course, it was coupled with some reference to cost and engineers reports. There is no doubt this question of 'better communication' must be settled sooner or later. Every Islander of course, says 'Tunnel,' but the possibility of that has not been surely established. Failing this, however, there may be other ways to improve the present inadequate service."
