Ceiling May Be Reached In Food Price Supports

By HAROLD MORRISON
Canadian Press Staff Writer
MONTREAL (CP) — Canadian officials feel the Commonwealth decision to fight excessive farm protectionism — protecting farmers against falling market or competing imports — may have a restraining influence in the rise of Canadian food price supports. But there will be no immediate move to open Canadian doors to competing imports from New Zealand or other Commonwealth countries. Nor are there any plans afoot to reduce existing supports as developed under the government's relatively new price stabilization legislation.

Gov't To Consider Starch Factory

Potato growers on Prince Edward Island may have the benefit of a starch diversion program in the near future if initial plans discussed this week with the Provincial Government materialize. Premier Matheson said every consideration will be given the establishment of a starch factory in the Province. His remarks followed a meeting of six growers with the Government on Thursday.

The growers, representative of a directorate named by the potato industry on the Island, asked in general terms, for government co-operation and assistance in getting such a plant started.

Premier Matheson said when more information regarding costs of construction; available supply of potatoes and the availability of markets for the processed products was available, further consideration would be given.

The need for some form of diversion program for Island potatoes has been strongly emphasized by producers for some time. New Brunswick potato growers for the past two years has been enjoying the benefits of the agricultural stabilization program through starch diversion. Under the program growers receive a floor price of 60 cents per bushel for No. 1 grade potatoes diverted to starch.

Not only does a starch diversion program give a minimum guarantee for unsold surpluses but it tends to stabilize the market throughout the year by disposing of a considerable portion of the otherwise saleable portion of the crop.

REV. TOMMY TYSON

To Deliver His Last Message

It is with regret that many people will attend the final meeting of a week long mission conducted in Charlottetown by Rev. Tommy Tyson of North Carolina who speaks at the Coliseum tomorrow night. Clergymen of the United Church in the areas adjacent to Charlottetown have cancelled their evening services so that their congregations can attend this final meeting of the Mission. Massed choirs from all the rural areas will join with those of Trinity and Park Royal to lead in the singing. During his short stay in Charlottetown, Mr. Tyson endeavored himself to everyone he met—first by his affable disposition and secondly by his powerful and logical presentation of the Gospel. He will have the good wishes of hundreds as he and his brother evangelist Rev. Jim Jones leave the Province next week for their homes in North Carolina.
