"The barrier of illiteracy is melting away but the barrier of poverty remains since five eighths of the world's population is poor," said Rev. John G. E. Ball, president of the P.E.I. District of the Canadian Bible Society at the annual meeting last evening in Heartz Memorial Hall, Trinity United Church, Charlottetown.

S'Side Boys Lead Halifax

HALIFAX (CP) — Paul MacWilliam's slap-shot goal at 17.59 of the third period gave Halifax Junior Canadiens a 6-6 tie with London Nationals of the OHA Junior "A" series in an exhibition hockey game before 3,000 night.

London, getting two-goal performances from Walt McKechnie and Stan Allen, was trailing 5-4 after 40 minutes of play, but moved in front 6-5 in the third period before MacWilliams' tying goal.

The Canadiens built up a 3-1 first period margin, but the Nationals outscored Halifax 3-2 in the second to pull close.

Rod Bossy was the big gun for the Halifax Juniors, firing a hattrick while teammates Mike Hornby and Brian O'Byrne joined MacWilliams with a goal apiece. Maurice St. Jacques and Neil Clairmont were the other London marksmen.

Nationals' netminder Norm Farr turned aside 33 shots, while George MacNeil was called on to stop 27 drives.

The two clubs clash again in Truro tonight.

Lake Level Is Below Average

CORNER BROOK (CP)—The water level at nearby Grand Lake has dropped below seasonable averages, H. K. Joyce, president and general manager of Bowaters Newfoundland Pulp and Paper Mills Ltd., said in a statement to employees here. However, he said there was no immediate cause for alarm.

The lake supplies the company's hydro power plant at Deer Lake, about 30 miles north of here, and the water level is currently 20 inches below normal for the winter season

The problem is expected to continue until the spring thaw and runoff.

Mr. Joyce said demands on the Bowater Power Co. at Deer Lake have increased in the last three years because of growing requirements for power by the Corner Brook Pulp and Paper Mill and this city.

The power plant also supplies mines in northern Newfoundland and the American Smelting and Refining Co. Ltd. in Buchans, Nfld.

Unique Protest Seen In Ottawa

By MARILYN ARGUE

OTTAWA (CP)—Protests are common in the capital, but a group of Ottawa consumers is staging one that they feel is unique.

Two years ago, seven families set up the Co-operative Supply Depot, a non-profit store which they say supplies food needs of members at savings of 15 per cent under supermarket prices.

Tonight the co-op, now grown to 75 member families, opens a new, larger store under a full-time manager in the citys west end. It is holding an open house three nights this week in an ambitious bid for more members.

The new premises are a far cry from what the co-op has had in the past.

Members once picked up stocks from the wholesale house in a station wagon and divided it in the basement of a members house. They expanded to a shack at a skating rink, then to an abandoned street car barn and later to a tiny shop.

CALLS IT A PROTEST

"The store is a minority protest against supermarket selling — expensive ads, trading stamps, soft music and lighting,' says Roy LaBerge, one of the projects organizers.

"We never expect to appeal to the majority, though. Lots of people want to spend $8 or $10 a week for the emotional satisfaction of going to one of those Taj ahals.

"There are a lot of co-ops in Canada, especially on the Prairies and in the Maritimes, but ours is unique because we separate operating and food costs.'

Members pay $1.50 a week to over operating expenses including store rent and salary for full-time manager Cy Warner, 23, a graduate of St. Francis Xavier University with merchandising experience.

Members join for six-month terms—"This way the store can't go broke," says Mr. LaBerge, public relations director of the Canadian Union of Public Employees. They pay $5 share capital when they join, which is refunded if they withdraw. Each member family has one vote.

Store stock is chosen by "best buy' committees which test products and inform members of the results.

CAN GET SPECIAL ITEMS

Members may request specific products on a survey sheet, or make special bulk orders of slow-moving items like dog food.

Mr. LaBerge says it wouldnt pay a single person to join, though some have just to show they approve of the ideological protest.

"A single person wouldn't buy enough food to make it worth his while, but for a group of single girls, say, sharing an apartment, it would be profitable.'

Household needs like soap and cosmetics have been added to the food stock, but impulse buying is still sternly frowned on. "We keep the candy behind the counter where the children can't see it and we don't put the most expensive brand of tinned goods at eye level the way they do in the chain stores.'

Bobby Hull's Best Game Almost Went Unnoticed

CHICAGO (CP)—There was a night when Bobby Hull looked like anything but a teen-age idol.

An accidental high stick had squashed his nose against his face, leaving him barely able to breathe and with a couple of shiners that matched the black on his Chicago uniform. What didn't show was the shoulder injury, suffered two weeks earlier, that had to be frozen before every game.

But the Black Hawks were a game away from elimination in their 1963 Stanley Cup semi-final against Detroit Red Wings. As long as the solidly-built left winger could skate, he was the biggest scoring threat they had.

SCORED THREE

So Hull put in 45 minutes of ice time, beat Terry Sawchuk with three whistling drives and diverted the Detroit defence before laying a perfect pass to Eric Nsterenko for a fourth goal.

The Red Wings pulled away with three third-period goals to win 7-4. But even if Hull eventually scores 75 or 80 goals in a season, many of his fans will always single out that game as the greatest of his career.

It also offers the 27-year-old Golden Jet a bit of supporting evidence in his constant efforts to convince skeptical sports writers that goal scoring means less to him than Chicago victories.

In the nine years since Hull joined the Hawks, the victories have come with the goals.

CLUB MOVED WITH HULL

When he came up as a 19-year-old rookie in the fall of 1957, the club had finished out of the National Hockey League playoffs 10 times in 11 years and had spent the last four in the cellar. They moved up to fifth that year. Since then, they have never been worse than third.

Hull's contribution over that period has included two NHL scoring championships and three years as the NHL's top goal scorer, with both totals virtually certain to increase by one at the end of the current campaign.

At the age of 23, he joined Maurice Richard and Bernie Geoffrion of Montreal Canadiens at the 50-goal level, which only a crippling injury can prevent him from surpassing this season.

He was the youngest player ever to score 300 goals and has fired 30 or more for the last seven consecutive seasons, a mark unmatched by Richard or the great Gordie Howe of Detroit, his only serious rival among active NHL sharpshooters.

HAS STATISTICAL SIDE

No statistical achievement will ever end the arguments as to the relative merits of the three, the acknowledged giants of modern hockey.

Richard, whose mark of 50 goals in 50 games Hull failed to reach this season, is best remembered for his devastating burst of speed and pinpoint accuracy when the puck came to him anywhere inside an opponent's blue line.

Howe, the fabulous right winger whose 20-year career has brought him every NHL career scoring record, is more versatile, relying increasingly on finesse and physical strength to confound faster - skating opponents. Of the three, he is easily the most accomplished playmaker.

HAS POWER TO BURN

With Hull, the trademarks are speed, power and possibly the hardest shot the game has ever known.

"Hull hasn't a weakeness," is the verdict of right-winger Andy Bathgate, the Detroit veteran who has attempted to check the Blonde Bomber since he came into the league. "Unless you stop him in his own end, you don't have a chance."

His solid five-foot-10, 193-pound frame enables him to flatten opponents who attempt to bodycheck him and the force of his slap-shot raises bruises on a goaltender despite his protective equipment.

Chicago coach Billy Reay frequently complains that some players aren't overly fussy about the methods they use to keep Hull under control. He recently singled out Ed Westfall of Boston Bruins as one who resorted to hooking and holding.

"It's a shame that the most colorful player in the league has to be checked illegally," the coach said.

Hull, resolutely soft-spoken in interviews, observed mildly that Westfall appears more interested in playing the man than the puck. But his play has become noticeably more robust in response to the closer checking.

FIGHTS MORE NOW

Last season, when he won the Lady Byng Memorial Trophy for sportsmanship combined with playing ability, Hull drew only 32 minutes in penalties. This year, his total already has reached the 60s and he has been involved in several scuffles with over-zealous opponents.

But there has been no corresponding change in Hull's unfailing amiability off the ice. No NHL player is more patient with autograph-seekers, photographers or interviewers.

With his wife, Joanne, and sons Bobby, 4, Blake, 3, and Brett, 1, he lives modestly in a three-room bungalow in suburban Chicago during the hockey season, returning in the summer to a four - bedroom home in Demorestville, Ont., just across the Bay of Quinte from his birthplace of Point Anne.

Here Hull indulges his passion for raising purebred cattle, a subject he clearly prefers to hockey in off-the-ice conversation.

He runs a 600-acre farm, stocked with 160 Herefords, in partnership with his 21-year-old brother Dennis, currently a left winger with St. Louis Braves, the Hawks' Central Professional League affiliate.

The herd, which he describes as the best in Canada, is only one of Hull's extracurricular enterprises. He is active in promoting advertising testimonials and off-the-ice appearances for a number of NHL players and candidly admits that he is after the highest possible fee for his clients.

AFTER MORE PAY

It was during one such promotional junket in Hawaii last summer that Hull was quoted as stating his intention to get a $100,000 contract this season. He diplomatically denied the story, but there appears to be little doubt that he will eventually become the first hockey player to receive a six-figure salary.

The eldest of 11 children of a cement company mill foreman, Bobby left home for the first time at the age of 14 to play for a Chicago-sponsored junior B club in Hespeler, Ont., and hasn't spent a winter at home since.

Graduating to junior A hockey in St. Catharines, he jumped from there to the Black Hawks without playing a game in the minors.

Hull lost out narrowly to Frank Mahovlich of Toronto Maple Leafs for the 1957-58 rookie award. It turned out to be the only individual NHL trophy available to him that he failed to win.

But Hull has yet to see his name on one NHL award—the Prince of Wales Trophy, which goes to the league's first-place team.

With or without Hull, the Hawks have never achieved that status in their 37 years of league membership. That's all the incentive he needs to keep trying to put the puck into the net.
