Four French Warships Turn Up Mysteriously In Algiers

ALGIERS (Reuters) — Four French warships turned up mysteriously in Algiers Monday night, amid speculation that their officers planned to throw in their lot with army leaders demanding the return to power of Gen. Charles de Gaulle. The ships slipped into port at Bone, in Eastern Algeria, after a hurried departure from Malta Sunday night. Their arrival coincided with a visit to Bone by paratroop Gen. Jacques Massu and Gen. Soustelle, two leaders of the Algerian junta opposing the government of Premier Pierre Pflimlin. A spokesman for French naval headquarters here and a defence ministry spokesman in Paris said the ships — an aircraft carrier and three anti-aircraft destroyers — were following orders from Paris. But observers at Valletta, Malta, noted that the commanding officers of the ships sailed wearing the Cross of Lorraine, symbol of de Gaulle's wartime Free French movement. HASTY DEPARTURE The four ships were to have taken part in a NATO review at Malta today. Their crews were rounded up hastily Sunday night and the vessels set out without explanation of their destination or their plans. Admiral Philippe Auboyneau, commander of the French Mediterranean fleet, flew to Valletta from Algiers Sunday night, shortly before the ships pulled out. Commandant Jean Guerin, Auboyneau's chief of staff, said the ships had returned to Bone "to work." "Paris gives the orders," he added. "All the vessels of the French Navy must obey Paris." The four French ships steamed into Bone headed by the aircraft carrier Lafayette. The other vessels are the destroyers Chevalier Paul, Dupetit, Thouars and Maille Breze. Meanwhile, Algerian nationalists fighting for independence from France moved back into action Monday at Boufarik, south of Algiers. An insurgent hurled a grenade into a restaurant there, injuring 11 persons.

De Gaulle friends said he would go to Paris Monday night. The Communist-controlled General Confederation of Labor called a strike for today to fight de Gaulle's return to power. Algiers — Insurgents accuse Paris of plotting Tunisian incidents to discredit the committee of public safety; renewed fighting between French and Tunisians pose grim problem; Tunisians demonstrate angrily to demand withdrawal of French units of French Mediterranean fleet arrive in Algeria while admiral consults NATO commander in Valletta, Malta. ### 20 Wounded In Bomb Explosion

BEIRUT, Lebanon (CP) — A bomb explosion in a streetcar killed six persons Monday on the eve of a reported compromise bid by Lebanon's government to its political opposition. The bomb wrecked the streetcar and wounded 20 persons. It was the bloodiest single act of terrorism since rioting and a general strike against the government began 17 days ago. The blast occurred a few hundred yards from the foreign ministry, where Foreign Minister Charles Malik was receiving diplomats just before he was due to leave by air for New York. Malik later postponed until mid-week his departure for New York, where he is to present Lebanon's complaint of outside interference to the UN Security Council. Lebanon accuses Egypt and Syria of provoking the uprising against the Lebanese government.
