Would Have Attitude On Foreign Capital Continue

By FORBES RHUDE
Canadian Press Business Editor

Sir Harry Pilkington, British industrialist, thinks Canada should maintain its present attitude towards capital from other countries and not start to think of applying restrictions to it.

Sir Harry heads Pilkington Brothers Ltd., British glass-manufacturing firm which has been in the Pilkington family since it was founded 130 years ago.

He gave his opinions on capital in a press interview when he was told some Canadians feel that companies operating here should offer a proportion of their shares for sale to the Canadian public.

Capital is attracted to Canada, Sir Harry replied, not only because of the opportunities here, but because it feels it will be well treated and not unduly hampered.

For instance, if Pilkingtons had, say, v1,000,000 to invest abroad and had a choice between a lower profit in Canada and a higher profit in certain other countries, it probably would come to Canada because of the better and more secure atmosphere here.

RESTRICTIONS DIFFERENT

But if Canada were to apply restrictions, then Canada would lose much of her appeal and the company might feel that if it had to deal with restrictions anyway it could as well go where profits were higher.

If a company wishes to offer shares, he continued, all well and good, but it should not be compelled to do so.

A private company, he commented, offers some advantages. Pilkingtons—who have been in Canada about 60 years—had spent $10,000,000 in Canada since the war in capital expenditures of a permanent kind.

However, it had taken "practically nothing" out in profits but had reinvested them in Canada. It was freer to make such a decision than if it had public shareholders pressing for a dividend.

Sir Harry said he assumed Canadians have no lack of opportunities for investment, else there would not be such demand here for capital.

Other countries, too, were experiencing great growth and there was no lack of places for capital to go. Almost every modern country in the world was looking for it, including Britain.

Sir Harry and Arthur Pilkington, a cousin, now are visiting the plants in the Toronto area of Pilkington Brothers (Canada) Ltd., of which Lewis J-B. Forbes is president. Sir Harry is chairman of both the British and Canadian companies, and Arthur Pilkington is a director with particular interest in export operations.

LABOR DIFFICULTIES

In regard to current British labor difficulties, Sir Harry commented:

"Strikes in Britain always seem to get a maximum of attention overseas. Even short strikes are damaging because we can't afford them, but their actual importance should not be over-estimated.

"We still have in Britain some of the best labor relations in the world and we lose fewer days from disputes, taking one year with another, than any other modern industrial nation.

"Personally I don't believe there is any bitter struggle or long strike in prospect."

The current immigration movement from Britain had also been the subject of "exaggerated reports." It was, in fact, "desirable and quite moderate."

In regard to the glass industry, there had been extremely heavy demand in 1956 and 1955, with resultant over-buying and over-stocking. This had resulted in a reduction in current production, but he expected demand to rise rapidly later this year.

"After all," said Sir Harry, "a window is made of glass, for which there is no substitute."

Pleads Case Of "Old Refugees"

TORONTO (CPA) — Canada should admit its share of the "old refugees" still remaining in Europe, many of whom are ill, blind or were maimed in the Second World War, the United Church of Canada urged Thursday.

The church's home mission board, at its annual meeting, commended the department of citizenship and immigration for its admission of Hungarian refugees, but asked the department to consider the admission of a share of the unhealthy as well.

Opening lead— king of diamonds.

When I asked Oswalk Jacoby to give me a hand for the Famous Hands series he came up with this humdinger.

It was dealt in a rubber bridge game in St. Louis some years ago. Jacoby held the South hand. The action started off tamely enough with a spade bid by Jacoby.

West held a grand slam in his own hand. Whether he adopted the best strategy by making an informatory double, or whether his latter bids were tactically correct, is an open question.

The only bid West made to which I would take exception was his redouble of the six heart bid. It seems to me he tipped his mitt unnecessarily. Thirteen - trick hands are scarcer than hen's teeth, and it's better to tread softly with them.

Jacoby got scared of his own double of six hearts and ran to six spades as soon as he learned he had made a mistake. When West then bid seven hearts, which North didn't disturb, Jacoby correctly decided West had 13 red ones. So Jacoby bid seven spades as a sacrifice.

He was mistaken again. It turned out to be no sacrifice. He made the grand slam.

The play was on the spectacular side. The opening diamond lead (an unlucky choice) was ruffed in dummy with the queen. The three of spades was led from dummy and when East played the deuce, Jacoby played the six!

A diamond was trumped low in dummy and the nine of spades was finessed.

Another diamond was ruffed with dummy's last trump, the jack. The south hand was entered with the ace of clubs. The A-K of spades drew East's remaining two trumps as both of dummy's hearts were discarded.

Dummy's good clubs took care of the rest of the tricks. West was a sadder and wiser man when the amazing result was scored.

Let it not be overlooked, though, that if South trumps the opening lead with the three of spades, he is defeated.

Redtail Brings News

Some news may be both good and bad
Make some rejoice, and others sad.

It is queer how some things can be both good and bad. That happens with news quite often. Which it is depends on the one who receives it.

"Do you mean Harrier the Marsh Hawk and Mrs. Harrier?" she Asked.

While Mrs. Redtail the Hawk was putting the finishing touches to the new nest over in the Green Forest, Redtail was over near the Green Meadows hunting for Mice. Mrs. Redtail had just put in place on the edge of the new nest a twig with two or three green leaves on it. She was doing it just for looks. She liked those green leaves on the edge of the nest. They were of no real use, but they were pleasing to look at.

Redtail returned with a Mouse for Mrs. Redtail. He didn't look especially happy when he gave it to her. She noticed this and said so.

"We were a little late in getting here as you know, my dear, but wer are not the only ones," said he.

"Who else is late?" asked Mrs. Redtail as she picked up the Mouse and swallowed it.

"A couple of our cousins whom I had hoped would not show up this year. However, they have. I saw them flying over the Green Meadows this morning," replied Redtail.

Mrs. Redtail guessed right who it was that Redtail had seen. "Do you 'mean Harrier the Marsh Hawk and Mrs. Harrier?" she asked.

"They are the ones," replied Redtail. "I hope they are not going to stay. Perhaps they will go, on farther."

"What difference will it make to us whether they stay or go?" Mrs. Redtail wanted to know.

"It will make a lot of difference," retorted Redtail. "You know as well as I do the more hunters there are, the harder the hunting is. Those two like Mice as well as we do. And if they nest on the Green Meadows that is where they will do most of their hunting. Every Mouse caught by them is one less Mouse for us. As it is we have to share the hunting on the Green Meadows with Reddy Fox and his family, some of the Owl folks, and a few others who come now and then to hunt there."

"Perhaps they feel the same way about us," said Mrs. Redtail, "anyway, they are not likely to bother us over here in the Green Forest. They don't like the Green Forest. I guess they don't like trees. How anyone cannot like trees, I don't know. But I guess it is so with them. I've never seen either one of them doing any hunting over here in the past. Anyway, I'm not going to worry about it."

Redtail made no reply but turned and flew back toward the Green Meadows. There was a certain tree at the edge of the Green Forest in which he liked to sit. From it he could look all over the Green Meadows. He could look across to the dear Old Brair patch and beyond that to the Pasture. In another direction he could look over to the Big River. He could see the Old Orchard and Farmer Brown's dooryard. The smiling Pool was not too far away. It was a splendid place from which to watch all that was going on and pick up news. Redtail spent a great deal of time on his favorite limb high in that tree.
